I bowed humbly before this compliment. My time had been lightly praised by Miss Octavia and again by Wiggins. A long telegram from my assistant that reached me while I dressed for dinner had urged my immediate attendance upon my office. Some of my best clients, now requiring their houses for the winter, were in desperate straits. But Octavia Hollister did not occur in the life of every young man, and both Cecilia and Hezekiah had taken strong hold upon my imagination. Wiggins' place among the dramatic personae would in itself have compelled my sympathetic attention, and the nine silk hats that I had seen holding over the stile still danced before my eyes.

"Miss Hollister," I said, "my time is yours to command. My office is well organized, and I am sure that my assistant is equal to any demands that may be made upon him. Pray state in what manner I may serve you."

"I am going far, I know, Mr. Ames, but I beg that you will not be in haste to leave my aunt's house. She must have been strongly prejudiced in your favor or she would not have asked you here on so short acquaintance. I am confident that she has no thought of your leaving. She expressed her great liking for you at luncheon, and I am sure that she will see to it that you do not lack for entertainment. I assume that you must have gathered from what Mr. Wiggins told you of my acquaintance with him the peculiar plight in which I am placed."

I bowed. If she gazed in the dark and needed my help in finding the light, I was not the man to desert her. I had dropped my plumb line into too many dark chasms not to feel the fascination of mystery. As I expressed again my entire willingness to abide at Hopfield Manor as long as she wished, the footman announced Mr. Hartley Wiggins.

We had hardly exchanged greetings before another man was announced, and then another. I should say that it was at intervals of about three minutes that the settee servant appeared in the curtained doorway and announced a caller until nine had been admitted. My spirits soared high as the gentlemen from the Prescott Arms appeared one after the other. The earlier arrivals rose to greet the later ones, and as they were all in evening clothes I experienced, as when I had seen the same gentlemen in their afternoon raiment crossing the stile, a sense of something fantastic and eerie to them. In the interest of brevity and to avoid confusion, I tabulate them here with a notation as to their residence and occupation, taking such data from the notebook in which, at subsequent dates, I set down the facts which are the basis of this chronicle.

Hartley Wiggins, lawyer and farmer, Hare and Tortoise club, New York. Linnaeus B. Henderson, planter, Roanoke, Va.

Cecil Hugh, Lord Arrowood, no occupation, Arrowood, Hants, England.

Daniel P. Ormsby, manufacturer of knit goods, Utica, N. Y.

S. Forrest Hume, lecturer on Scandinavian literature, Occidental university, Long Trail, Okla.

John Stewart Dick, pragmatist, Omaha, Neb.

Pendennis J. Arlathnot, banker and horseman, Lexington, Ky.

Desiree H. Shallenberger, novelist and small fruits, Sycamore, Ind.

George W. Gorse, capitalist, Redlands, Cal.

We rose and stood in our several places when a moment later Miss Octavia entered. She greeted the suitors graciously and then in her most charming manner called one after the other to sit beside her on a long davenport, the time apportioned being weighed with nicety, so that none might feel himself slighted or preferred. These interviews consumed more than half an hour, and the movement thus occasioned gave considerable animation to the scene.

It may seem ridiculous that these gentlemen thus paying court to a young woman should call upon her at the same hour, but I must say that the gravity of the suitors and the entire sobriety of Cecilia did not affect humorously, nor did I feel at all out of place in this strange company. I found myself agreeably engaged for several minutes in discussing Hume with the Oklahoma professor, who proved to be a delightful fellow. His experiences of life was apparently wide, and he told me with an engaging frankness of his meeting with the Hollisters in France, and of his pursuit of them over many weary miles the previous summer. As no one had elected his courses in the university at the beginning of the fall term, he had been granted a leave of absence, and this accounted for his freedom to press his suit at Hopfield Manor at this season. He was a big fellow, with clean cut features, and bore himself with a manly detachment that I found attractive.

He alone, I may say, of the gentlemen who had thus appeared in Miss Octavia's library met me in a cordial spirit. Even Wiggins seemed not wholly pleased to find me there again, though he had asked me to remain. The manner of the others expressed disdain, suspicion or fierce hostility.

When the last man rose from the davenport Miss Octavia called me to her side. She seemed contrite at having neglected me during the day, but assured me that later she hoped to place an entire day at my disposal. As we talked the nine suitors sat in a semicircle about Cecilia, while the group listened to an anecdotal exchange between Professor Hume and Henderson, the Virginia planter. My opinion of Cecilia Hollister as a girl of high spirit, able to carry off any situation no matter how difficult, rose to new altitudes as I watched her. In this strange wooing was not to her liking, she certainly made the best of it. She capped Henderson's best story with a better one in negro dialect, and no professional entertainer could have improved upon her recital. As she finished we all joined in the general laugh. Lord Arrowood's guttural booming into a trill bolstered, when Miss Octavia quietly rose and excused herself. About five minutes later, when the company had plunged into another series of anecdotes, I suddenly became conscious that the fireplace, near which I sat, had all at once begun to burn strangely. Much in the manner of the performance the previous night, it abruptly gasped and choked, the smoke billowed in a great swirl and then poured out into the room.

After my examination of the flames

the morning I had dismissed them from my mind, and this extraordinary behavior of the library fireplace startled me. It is not in reason that a perfectly normal fireplace, built in the most approved fashion and with chimneys that rise into as clear an ether as October can bestow could act so monstrously without the intervention of some malign agency. We have discussed all the possibilities the previous night, and I was not anxious to bear further lay opinions. The chimney's conduct was annoying, the more so that to my professional sense it was inexplicable.

Lord Arrowood had retreated discreetly toward the door, and the other had risen and stood close behind Cecilia, whose gaze was bent rather anxiously upon me.

A dark thought had crossed my mind. As our eyes met I felt that she had read my suspicions and did not wholly reject them. Henderson was valiantly poking the logs, while one of two of the other men gave him the benefit of their advice. I crossed the hall to the drawing room, but no one was there. I went back to the billiard room, but saw nothing of Miss Octavia. Cecilia had rung for the footman, and I passed him in the hall on his way to answer her summons. I stopped him with an inquiry on my lips, but I could not ask the question. Even in my perplexity as to the cause of the chimney's remarkable performance I did not so far forget myself as to communicate my suspicion to a servant.

"Nothing, Thomas," I said, and the man passed on.

It was possible, of course, that Miss Octavia knew more than she cared to tell about the erratic ways of the library chimney, or she might indeed be the cause of its vagaries. Sufficient time had elapsed after retirement from the library to allow her to gain the roof and clap a stopper on the chimney pot. This did not, however, account for the fact that on the previous evening she had been present in the library when the same chimney had manifested a similar sulkiness. I was still pondering these things when a heard loud laughter from the library, and on returning found the logs again blazing in the fireplace, from which the smoke rose demurely in the due.

"This fireplace is like a fussy Mr. Ames," said Cecilia, "and spurts smoke at regular intervals. As I remember, the clock on the stair was striking its last night when the smoke poured out and there it is striking now."

She tossed her head slightly, and this was, I thought, in disavowal of the suspicion that must still have shown itself a little stubbornly in my face.

I withdrew again in a few minutes and followed the great chimney's course upward. Miss Octavia's apartments were at the front of the house, her sitting room windows looking out upon the Italian garden. Her doors were closed, but I knew from my examination in the morning that the door of her fireplace tapped the chimney that rose from the drawing room and had nothing whatever to do with the library chimney.

From the fourth floor I gained the roof by the route followed on my inspection of the house in the morning. The smoke from the library chimney was rising in the crisis, still air lightly. I leaned upon the eavelements and looked off across the hills, enjoying the loveliness of the sky, in which the planets twinkled superiorly. There was nothing to be learned here, and I crept back to the trap door through which I had come, made it fast and continued on down to the library.

There somewhat to my surprise I found that in my absence all had Hume had taken their departure. As I passed unseen in the doorway I caught words that were clearly not intended for my ear.

"Cecilia sat by the long table near the fireplace. Hume stood before her, his arms folded."

"You are kind. You do me great honor, Professor Hume, but under circumstances can I become your wife?"

I retreated hastily to the billiard room, where I took a cue from the rack and amused myself for perhaps fifteen minutes, when, hearing the outer door close and knowing that Hume had departed with his conceited return to the library.

Cecilia sat where I had left her, and at first glance I thought she was reading. But she turned quickly as I crossed the room. She held in her hand an oblong silver trinket not larger than a card case. A short pencil similar to those affixed to dance cards was attached to it by a slight cord, and she had, I inferred, been making a notation of some kind on a leaf of the silver laminated booklet. Even after she had looked up and smiled at me her eyes sought the page before her. Then she closed the covers and clasped the pretty toy in her hand. As though to divert my attention she returned at once to the chimney in a vein of light irony.

"You see," she said, "there is ample reason for your retreating here. You would hardly find anywhere else so interesting a test of your professional powers as Hopfield Manor offers. The house is haunted beyond question, and I can see that you are not a man to leave two defenseless women to the mercy of a ghost who drops down chimneys at will."

I suffered her chaff for several minutes, then I asked point blank: "Pardon me, but have you the slightest idea that Miss Octavia is stationed this? It is not possible that she was responsible last night. But she was not on this floor awhile ago when the smoke poured in here. I should like to hear your opinion."

"I saw that you suspected her before you left the room. Mr. Ames, and I must say that the idea is in no way creditable to you. If you entertain such a suspicion you must supply a motive, and just what motive would you give?"

ute to my Aunt Octavia in this instance?"

Her tone and manner plighted me or I should not have answered as I did. "It is possible," I said, "that some of these gentlemen who came here tonight were not to her liking, and it may have occurred to her to get rid of them by the obviously successful method of smoking them out."

She rose, still clasping the little silver backed notebook, and looked me over with amusement in her face and eyes.

"You are almost too ingenious, Mr. Ames. I hope that by breakfast time you will have some more plausible solution of the problem. Good night."

And so, tightly clasping the little book, she left the room. I followed her to the door, and at the turn of the stair she turned down and nodded her face as it hung above me for an instant seemed transfigured with happiness.

CHAPTER X.

I Meet a Playful Ghost.

IT was not yet 10 o'clock, and I was dismayed at the thought of being left to my own devices in this big country house, at an hour when the talk at the Hare and Tortoise usually became worth while. I sat down and began to turn over the periodicals on the library table, but I was in no mood for reading.

The butler appeared and offered me drink, but the thought of drink alone did not appeal to me. "I repeat," (Continued on page 6)

Microbes in Your Scalp

Authorities say that a microbe causes baldness. If you are losing your hair, try our remedy at our risk.

Professor Unna, of Germany, and Dr. Salouraud, the great French Dermatologist, claim that a microbe causes baldness, and their theory has been verified by eminent scientists. This microbe destroys the hair follicles, in time causing the scalp pores to close and the scalp to become shiny. Then, it is believed nothing will revive the growth. If treated before this occurs, baldness may be overcome.

We know of nothing that has given such universal satisfaction in treating the scalp and hair as Rexall's "93" Hair Tonic. It has been designed after long study to overcome the cause of falling hair as discovered by Prof. Unna, Dr. Salouraud and other scalp and hair specialists, and we believe it will do more than anything else can to remove dandruff and stop falling hair, and if any human agency can promote a new growth of hair it will do that, too.

We want you to make us prove it. We will pay for a month's treatment of Rexall's "93" Hair Tonic used during a trial, if you will use it according to directions, and are not thoroughly satisfied. When we will do this, you surely should not hesitate to at least try it.

Start the treatment today. Your mere request will get your money back if you want it. Two sizes: 50c and $1.00.

You can buy Rexall's "93" Hair Tonic in this community only at our store:

THE Courier believes that all the amendments which are to be voted upon next April should receive an affirmative vote. While there is much to be said on both sides in regard to the equal suffrage proposition we believe that with the present standard of equality in all lines of business and professional life, which exists between both sexes, the bars should be let entirely down and women should not only be given the ballot but should also assume the responsibilities which go with it. Whether it would be for the best, both for the nation and for women, we doubt, but if they wish to come down from the higher level, when we have always accorded to them, justice demands that their wishes should be granted, as this is a government of the people, and the consent of the governed.

We have said this in a class of soldiers who risk their lives as bravely as those on the battlefield and it is no more than right that the legislature should be allowed to make some provision for them when their days of fire fighting are over. The initiative, referendum and recall are all along the lines of progress, which places the real power where it belongs, in the hands of the people, and Michigan should embrace this opportunity to enroll herself with the progressive states of the Union, where these measures have been tried out and found to be in the interests of good government.

at their homes or elsewhere by respondent, his counsel or friends, and the statements of the jurors are so admirably worded as to give expression of sentiments not intended by them. Upon the hearing each repudiated the statements as published in the most emphatic terms. Each juror affirms that he acted honestly and based his verdict upon the evidence presented in the open court and the law as given. The published statements of the jurors, when read in connection with their testimony given at the hearing of this motion, are deprived of the meaning and force claimed for them by respondent. Taking into consideration the influence that was brought to bear upon each individual juror, the time, the place and circumstances under which his statements were made, the intention of the jurors as actually expressed and the statements that later appeared in the press in the form of affidavits or letters, there is no ground for the charge that this was a "fraud verdict" as claimed by respondent.

1 and 5. Reasons 4 and 5 we will consider together. Upon the charge that a frame-up or combination of business or professional men existed or that there was a conspiracy of the liquor interests to injure respondent, no testimony was submitted, and the attention of counsel being called to these charges as made through the public press, he denied that any such claims were made or authorized by him and that there was no foundation for such claims, as far as he knew.

6. It is not a fact that all the boys who have accused respondent of these practices have retracted. In fact, new charges, since the first trial, have been made and are now in possession of the officers.

7. As to the fairness of the trial, the answers to the questions asked on the examination of the jurors, touching their applications to sit on the trial, conclusively show that the jurors who tried the case were not prejudiced, and that they were not influenced in their verdict by any public opinion against Mr. Swift, if such existed. The nature of the crime is such as to shock any community. The mere recital of the facts would cause any juror to abhor the perpetrator. It would not, however, cause any person to determine the accused to be guilty. In fact the accused, with a high reputation for integrity and honesty, would be less apt to be prejudged guilty of this particular offense by those best acquainted with him, than he would be by strangers. The evidence he submitted fails to present any ground for these charges.

A careful reading of the testimony will convince anyone conversant with the rules of evidence that, on the side of the postal card, respondent could make use of none of the things presented by him on a new trial, and to any mind, if a verdict of not guilty were rendered, based upon this postal card there would be a failure of justice. Therefore, motion for new trial is denied.

Dated, Charlevoix, Michigan, March 17, A. D. 1913.

Fredrick W. Mayne, Circuit Judge.

Monday Swift's parole expired. Governor Ferris refusing to grant him any further time, and Swift went to the prison alone to begin serving out his sentence. He was put to work washing dishes until it is shown he is better adapted for some other class of work.

The people of Charlevoix county are heartily glad that this case is at last ended and congratulate the officials for their hard work against the hardest legal battle ever put up for in Michigan's criminal history. Mr. Clark, attorney for the defense, is also entitled to congratulations for the hard and well nigh successful fight he made for his client. Swift still protests his innocence but says he will make the best of it.

Boundry Line Settled.

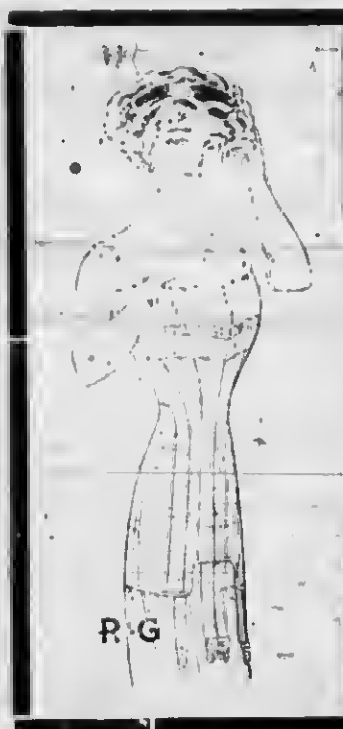

As a result of the conference between the joint committees of the Michigan and Wisconsin legislatures the boundry line between the two states east of Green Bay, which has long been a cause of dispute was definitely settled.

It is proposed to ask congress to make the state line on Green Bay plain by marking it with buoys.

CHANGES IN CITY CHARTER

Ex-Mayor Hampton Will Address the Men's Bible Class Next Sunday.

Next Sunday's meeting of the Men's Bible class, the first since the change of the hour of meeting from noon until five o'clock p. m., was largely attended.

The topic for discussion, "The Social Evil," was very interestingly discussed by Leader Rame, Rev. Chester Hill, J. D. Parrish, A. Bruce Hall, W. H. Miller, A. L. Coulter and others, all agreeing that the proper solution of the problem lay in the home training of our boys and girls.

Next Sunday Ex-mayor Hampton will address the class on "Proposed Changes in our City Charter." Mr. Hampton has devoted considerable thought to this important subject and the meeting will be one which should command the attendance of every tax payer in our city.

Sunday after next J. M. Drew will address the class on "Our Boys and Girls."

UNIFORM COURSE

Children in Country Districts Throughout the State Have Similar Work.

Probably comparatively few people understand that a uniform course of study is being carried out in the rural schools of Michigan this year. Under the present law, it is mandatory upon the Superintendent of Public Instruction to outline the course of study which must be followed in all districts except city districts. The course for the rural schools, however, is the only one which has been prescribed so far. As the present course of study contains some distinct changes in subject matter and methods of teaching, teachers are being criticized for following it. The teachers, however, are simply doing their duty under the law and the only authority to change the course of study lies with the Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The sheriff of Kalkaska county is kicking because his salary is not large enough. At the January session of the board of supervisors of that county, the salary was lowered to $250 a year, and the new sheriff thereby loses about $250 that he supposed he would get when he became elected to the office. Can it be possible that the morals of Kalkaska county have climbed so high that it can't support a sheriff?

the suggestion coldly, but after I had dropped my eyes to the English review I had taken up I was conscious that he stood his ground.

"Beg pardon, sir."

"Well?"

"It's a bit hot about the chimney, sir."

The professional man in me was at once alert. The chimney's conduct was inexplicable enough, but I was in no humor to brook the theories of a stupid servant. Still, he might know something, so I nodded for him to go on.

He glanced over his shoulder and came a step nearer.

"They say in the village, sir, that the house is 'haunted.'"

"Who says it, James?"

"The liverman told the coachman and the 'onsaid got hit from a seam stress. It's very queer, sir."

"Tubbs, James, I'm amazed that a person of your station should listen to a liverman's gossip. There's the chimney, it's working perfectly. Some shift of air currents causes it to puff a little smoke into this room occasionally, but those things are not related to the supernatural. We'll find some way of correcting it in a day or two."

"Very good, sir. But beg pardon, the chimney isn't hot, it's cold, sir."

"Walks?" I exclaimed, sitting up and throwing down my review. "What walks?"

"You 'ear hit, sir, bin the walls. It goes right through the solid brick most times."

"You 'ear a mouse in the walls and think it's a ghost? But you forget James, that is a new house, only a year or so old, and spooks don't frequent such places. If it were an old place it might be possible that the creaking of doors and the settling of walls would cause uneasiness in nervous people. The ghost tradition usually rests on some ugly fact. But here nothing of the kind is present."

"It was one of 'is majesty's horrors, sir," he answered hoarsely.

It dashed over me that this old fellow was out of his head; but, sane or mad he was clearly greatly disturbed. It was best, I thought, to either hypothesize to speak to him patiently, and I rose, the better to deal with the situation.

"What nonsense is this you have in your head? You're in the United States, and there aren't any majesty's soldiers to deal with. You forget that you're not in England now."

"But this 'ere country used to be English, you may recall, sir. The story the coachman got bin the village goes back to the old times, sir. I say so call hit, sir, and 'is majesty's troops was puttin' down the rebellion bin these parts. Some Ameriann rebels chased a British soldier from his house near White Plains to these 'ere woods as they was then, and they 'unged 'im, sir, right where this 'ere 'ouse stands if I may make so free."

"You'd better go to bed, James. And don't encourage talk among the other servants about this ghost. I know something about the building of houses, and I'll give these walls a good looking over. Good night."

I made myself comfortable for an hour, smoking a cigar over an article on English politics, and while I read a big log placidly burned itself to ashes. I found the switch and snuffed out the library lights. When I had gained the second floor I turned off the light in the hall below, and as I looked down the wall to make sure I had turned the right key, the third floor lights suddenly died and I was left in darkness. "You'd better go to bed, James. And don't encourage talk among the other servants about this ghost. I know something about the building of houses, and I'll give these walls a good looking over. Good night."

I made myself comfortable for an hour, smoking a cigar over an article on English politics, and while I read a big log placidly burned itself to ashes. I found the switch and snuffed out the library lights. When I had gained the second floor I turned off the light in the hall below, and as I looked down the wall to make sure I had turned the right key, the third floor lights suddenly died and I was left in darkness. This was the last bit of concerting I was quite sure that the upper lights had been snuffed out brightly after the darkness of the lower hall, so that it was hardly possible that the one switch had cut out both lights.

Standing by the rail that guarded the well, I peered upward, thinking that some one above me was manipulating another switch, but the silence was as complete as the blackness. I was about to turn from the rail to the wall to find the switch, but at this moment, as my face was still lifted in the tentativeness with which I was listening something brushed my cheek—some thing soft of touch and swift of movement. As I gripped the rail I felt this touch once, twice, thrice. Then my hand sought the wall mullion, and with so bad an aim that it was quite a minute before I found the switch plate and snuffed all the lights. The stair and the halls above and below me sprang into being again, and I stood blinking stupidly upward.

Though I was in a modern house thoroughly lighted by electricity I can not deny that this incident, following as quickly upon the other's story, enclosed a moment's acute hair-raising accompaniment by an uncomfortable tremor of the legs. As already hinted I lay no claim to great valor. As for ghosts I am half persuaded of their existence, and, after witnessing a presentation of Hamlet, always feel that Shakespeare is as safe a guide in such matters as the destructive scientific critics.

There were various plausible explanations of the failure of the lights. Some switch that I did not know of, perhaps in the third floor hall, might have been turned, or the power house in the village might have been shifting dynamos. Either solution of the riddle was credible. But the ghostly touch on my face could not be accounted for so readily. Leaving the lights on, I continued to the third floor and examined the switch and sought in other ways to explain the phenomena. My composure returned more slowly than I care to confess, and I think it was probably in my mind that the ghost of King George's dead soldier might be lying in wait for me, but I saw and heard nothing. The doors of the unused chambers on the third floor were closed, and I did not feel justified in trying them. The servants were housed on this floor at the rear of the house, and a door that cut off their quarters proved on examination to be tightly locked.

The fourth floor was only a half story, used for storage purposes. The roof was gained, I recalled, by an iron ladder and a hatchway in a trunk room. I ran down to my room and found a candle, to be snuffed against any further flickering of the lights, and set out for the fourth floor. I changed my coat and with a couple of candles and a box of matches started for the roof. My courage had risen now, and I was ready for any further adventure that the night might hold for me. Miss Hollister and Cecilia were both in their rooms, presumably asleep. The servants doubtless had their doors barred against ghostly visitors, and the house was mine to explore as I pleased.

I think I was humming slightly as I mounted the stair, which, in keeping with the general luxuriance that characterized the furnishings of the house, was thickly carpeted even to the fourth floor. I was slipping my hand along the rail and mullion, I dare say, a little jauntily as I served my courage to an unfamiliar notch when suddenly, midway of the first half and just before I reached the turn where the stair broke, the lights faded again with startling abruptness. This was carrying the joke pretty far, and instantly I clapped my hand to my pocket for the box of safety matches, dug it out and then in my haste dropped the lid essential to ignition and stooped to find it.

The stair had narrowed on this flight, and as I sought with futile eagerness to regain the box lid I could have sworn that some one passed me. Still half stooping, I stretched out no arms and clasped empty air, and suddenly had I thrown myself forward that I lost my balance and rolled downward the space of half a dozen trends before I recovered myself. I was badly scared and hardly less angry at having missed through my own clumsiness the joy of grasping with the ghost of one of King George's soldiers. But the matches having been lost in the pitch darkness of the stair, I could get my bearings again only by clinging to the stair rail, until I found the second floor switch.

I stood with head and shoulders thrust through the opening.

As I began to analyze my sensations during the temporary eclipse of the lights I was conscious of two things. The being, human or other, that had passed me had been light of step and fleet of motion. There had been something uncanny in the ease and speed of that passing. I was without conviction as to its direction, whether up or down, though I inclined to the former position for the reason that the employment of a concealed switch above seemed the more reasonable argument. And a faint, an almost imperceptible scent, as of a flower, had seemed to be a part of the passing. Miss is a sensitive nostril, and I was confident that it did not betray me in this.

I gathered up my matches and started again for the roof. The trunk room door opened readily, as on my morning inspection of the chimney pots, but as I glanced up I saw that the hatch was open. Through the aperture shone the heavens, a square of stars and bright with the moon's radiance. Picking up my matches, I ran nimbly up the ladder.

I had been surprised to find the hatch open, but it is not too much to say that I was greatly astonished by what I saw on the moon doored roof. There, midway of a flat area that lay between the two larger chimney pots, two persons were intently engaged, not in ghostly promanaging or posturing or even in audible conversation, but in a spirited bout with foils. I stood with head and shoulders thrust through the opening, staring at this unusual spectacle and not sure but that after all my eyes were tricking me.

It was a woman's voice, faint from breathlessness. She threw off her mask and dropped her foil and with a most human and feminine gesture put up her hand to adjust her hair. It was Cecilia Hollister in a short skirt and fencing coat.

Her opponent was a man, and as he, too, thrusting his neck I saw that he was a gentleman of years. I was about to withdraw when the stranger swung round and saw me. His sudden exclamation caused the girl to turn, and as a reasonable frankness was always seemed to me essential to a nice discretion I crawled out on the roof.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Hollister, but if I had known you were here I should not have intruded. The vagaries of the library chimney have been on my mind, and I was about to have another peep into yonder pot."

She stood at her ease, with one hand resting lightly against the inexplicable chimney in question and still somewhat spent from her exercise.

"Father," she said, turning to the stranger who stood near, "this is Mr. Ames, who is Aunt Octavia's guest."

The light of the gibbous moon enabled to discern pretty clearly the form and features of Mr. Bassford Hollister. And I find, in looking over my notes, that I accepted as a matter of course the singular meeting with my hostess' brother. I had grown so used to the ways of the Hollisters I already knew that the meeting with another member of the family at 11 o'clock at night on the roof of this remarkable house gave me no great shock of surprise. He was tall, slender and dark, with fine eyes that suggested Cecilia's. His close-trimmed beard was slightly gray, but he bore himself erect, and I had already seen that he was alert of arm and eye and shrewd of foot.

"Father and I have fenced together for years," said Cecilia. "My sister Hezekiah does not care for the sport. As you have already seen that my Aunt Octavia is an unusual woman given to many whims, I will not deny to you that at present my father is persona non grata in this house. I beg to assure you that nothing to his discredit or mine has contributed to that situation, nor can our meeting here tonight be construed as detestment to him or to me. In meeting my father in this way I have to a sense broken faith with my Aunt Octavia, but I am sure you, Mr. Ames, that it is only the natural affection for a daughter that led my father to seek me here in this clandestine fashion."

I should say that two full quarts of passed between the boss of the mother and my dashing on of the jumps. From top to bottom the lights shone brightly. But no one was visible, and I heard no sound in my part of the house.

I was without conviction as to its direction, whether up or down, though I inclined to the former position for the reason that the employment of a concealed switch above seemed the more reasonable argument. And a faint, an almost imperceptible scent, as of a flower, had seemed to be a part of the passing. Miss is a sensitive nostril, and I was confident that it did not betray me in this.

I gathered up my matches and started again for the roof. The trunk room door opened readily, as on my morning inspection of the chimney pots, but as I glanced up I saw that the hatch was open. Through the aperture shone the heavens, a square of stars and bright with the moon's radiance. Picking up my matches, I ran nimbly up the ladder.

I had been surprised to find the hatch open, but it is not too much to say that I was greatly astonished by what I saw on the moon doored roof. There, midway of a flat area that lay between the two larger chimney pots, two persons were intently engaged, not in ghostly promanaging or posturing or even in audible conversation, but in a spirited bout with foils. I stood with head and shoulders thrust through the opening.

As I began to analyze my sensations during the temporary eclipse of the lights I was conscious of two things. The being, human or other, that had passed me had been light of step and fleet of motion. There had been something uncanny in the ease and speed of that passing. I was without conviction as to its direction, whether up or down, though I inclined to the former position for the reason that the employment of a concealed switch above seemed the more reasonable argument. ed tags and the total amount to be collected.

The receipted tag will be considered as the addresser's application for a money order for the amount due the sender. A money order will then be issued, stamped C.O.D., and mailed to the sender in a postpaid envelope by the postmaster, who will enter on the tag the number of the money order, the amount and date of issue, and file it with other money order applications. No return receipt will be furnished the sender, as the money order serves that purpose.

The addresser will not be permitted to examine the contents of a C.O.D. parcel until it has been received for and all charges paid. A parcel may be refused when it is tendered for delivery, but after delivery has been effected it cannot be returned on account of dissatisfaction with the contents or the amount collected.

A parcel may be forwarded, in accordance with Section 16, with the payment of an additional C.O.D. fee. When so forwarded a duplicate receipt tag should be filed showing the office to which it is forwarded.

The records of C.O.D. parcels must be preserved at the mailing office for one year and at the delivery office for three years.

A claim for indemnity for a lost or rilled C.O.D. parcel should be treated as provided in Section 62, paragraphs 5, 9, 10, 11 and 12.

The department will not be responsible for errors made by senders and addressees regarding the character or contents of parcels.

Undeliverable C.O.D. parcels containing perishable matter should be treated as provided in Section 47.

WILL GREET ROAD BUILDERS

Good Roads Club Organized at Traverse City to Help Boost Lake Shore Highway.

The Traverse City Gravel Roads Club has been organized with ex-mayor Alfred V. Friedrich, president; A. Nusselman, secretary and L. E. Titus, treasurer. The club came into being all of a sudden last week when county road commissioner Frank Hamilton, gave the report of the committee that had charge of the recently held successful big road meeting. Mr. Hamilton pointed out that the meeting had surpassed all expectations and it had been attended by practically all the representative good roads men from Holland to the Straits of Mackinac, that there had been more enthusiasm developed than at any preceding meeting, and that as a result of the gathering there would be more miles of west ern Michigan highway improved the coming season than ever before in a single year. He further reported that satisfactory to all precedents, the financial end of the meeting had been as successful as the inspirational and that in consequence the committee had a cash balance to be turned over for future use.

The new club will undertake two lines of work, first it will furnish speakers for those villages as wish to hold road meetings; and second it will see that a suitable celebration is held in Traverse City when the "Good Roads Convention on Wheels" rolls into Traverse City about July 15.

This road convention is being promoted by Hon. Frank Hamilton. The road men are to start in autos at the Indiana state line on the morning of July 7 and travel northward on the West Michigan Lake Shore highway, picking up the road officials of the counties as the different counties are entered. Muskegon will probably be reached for the first night, Traverse City for the second, and Mackinac City for the third. Road meetings will be held evenings.

The new Traverse City club will be charged with the task of seeing that the road men on their arrival are given "the time of their lives."

CARING FOR SHEEP IN COLD WEATHER

One of the first essentials of managing sheep in the fall of the year is to provide proper shelter, says the American Agriculturist. The cold rains and damp nights of the fall season, like those of the spring, are a source of constant danger. Unless given proper protection they are sure to catch severe colds and run badly at the season and sometimes develop chronic catarrh or pneumonia and die. Sheep should have a good dry shed to sleep and rest in during the fall, and the shepherd should take particular care that none is left out overnight. The shed should be located on a high and dry place and should be kept well bedded to absorb any moisture that may be present at any time. It should also have plenty

The popular Southdown sheep originated in southern England and have been known for a long period to be very thrifty and good grazers. They grow the finest kind of wool and are early maturing. The Southdowns are well famed for quality of mutton, and at the international show, Chicago, where westerners compete on foot and as carcasses have been consistent and persistent winners. The Southdown wether shown was a prize winner.

Sheep that are well kept and fed during the fall enter winter quarters in a thrifty and vigorous condition and cannot only be kept in better shape, but can be kept much more cheaply through the winter. A pound of grain fed to a sheep in thrifty, well kept condition goes further to maintain it in good condition than two pounds of grain will go toward getting a thriftless one that has previously been poorly kept into such condition. It requires much less grain to put a sheep in good thrifty condition while it is still feeding on good fall pasture than it does when it is feeding on dry rough feeds in the shed or yard. About one-third less grain is required.

It is plain that the success and profit of sheep raising and breeding are determined largely by care and management that are tendered the flock during the fall season of the year. Giving the flock good care only in the fall season and poor care for the rest of the year or any one or two seasons would not be a profitable way of sheep raising. Good care and feeding are necessary at all seasons, but the fall season presents its peculiar problems, with it is well to deal with at this particular time.

NEW CURRENCY

Soon to be Issued, Will Sound Doom at the Counterfeiter.

Within the next six or twelve months will witness the greatest revolution that has ever been made in the size and appearance of paper money in the United States. Each one of the 200,000,000 notes of that kind now in circulation will be supplemented by uniform pieces of currency about a quarter size smaller than that now used.

In the comment occasioned by the paper post, the rural free delivery and every other innovation Uncle Sam has made in 20 years could be rolled into one it would not bring forth a tenth part of the popular interest which will be manifested when the people realize that each and every piece of paper money is to be changed. That day will sound the doom of the counterfeiter who now raises a one to a ten, a ten to a twenty, a twenty to a fifty dollar bill, or in fact misrepresents any denomination.

The value of the new bill will be apparent on sight. Any note with Washington's portrait will be $1; Jefferson's $2; Lincoln's $5; Cleveland's $10; Alexander Hamilton's $20; Andrew Jackson's $50; Franklin's $100; John Marshall's $500, and so on. It would then be utterly impossible for a forger to boost a $1 bill to a $10 bill, as is so frequently done, because within a few months after the system had been in vogue every man, woman and child will have learned that George Washington's picture stands for $1 and not for $10. We will then have the safest and simplest system of national currency in the world.

CARE OF COLTS IN WINTER.

Liberal Feeding Needed to Develop the Young Animals.

There is a great tendency on the part of many to neglect the colts on the farm during the winter. It too often happens that there is an apparent shortage of feed, and the result is that colts are stunted. One way of ruining a young colt is to have his growth stunted during the first year or two. Most of the colts on the farm get a good start the first six months of their lives from the fact that they are allowed to suckle the dam during that time. Early fall provides them with good pasture, and possibly they have been receiving some oats or shared a part of the feed of the mare. Such treatment puts them in good shape for the winter. But liberal feeding must be kept up if a strong, well developed and matured horse is expected. The colt's system requires a considerable amount of bone and muscle building material, and this can only be had by feeding nutritious feeds, such as oats, a little bran, clover hay, and if obtainable, some clover hay. The feeding of corn, so often practiced, is not desirable for the growing colt, but had better be confined to the matured horses. Access to the straw pile will not hurt a growing colt, but he should not be compelled to rely on the straw pile for a livelihood.

The question is often asked, Why do we find so many promising colts at the county fairs during the fall and such poor yearlings? The foregoing statement is in part explanatory of such a condition of affairs.

One of the best forms of investment on the farm is the liberal feeding of farm animals of all kinds, and the colt is no exception. A well bred colt if properly taken care of and fed the right kind of feed during his first three years of life will bring from $75 to $100 more when three years old than the one that is neglected and poorly fed. Good young horses are always in demand on the market and can often be supplied from the farms where colts receive the proper care and treatment.

Temple of Benares.

"Don't call Brooklyn the City of Churches," says a globe trotter who is equally familiar with the Hudson, the Rhine, the Ganges and the Nile. There is a city in India which is looked upon as "holy" by Buddhists and Brahmins which might dispute the title. Benares has about 2,000 temples, and in these and fixed in the narrow streets where the public is free to worship are about 500,000 idols. According to Hindu belief, it is the gate of paradise, to which all who dwell within its walls enter immediately.—New York Tribune.

Copy of Contract Which Must Be Approved By Government.

DUTIES OF THE FARM EXPERT

County Association Must Furnish Office and Means of Conveyance.

Expert Must Give All His Time to Service of Farmers at the County—Work of Organization Progressing Rapidly.

The work of organizing a county crop improvement association for this county is progressing rapidly. In all sections of the county financial assistance is promised as the work of the proposed association and duties of the agricultural advisor is explained.

Below we publish a copy of the contract which must be entered into between the farm expert and the county association as prepared by the government which fully sets forth his duties. After the usual form, setting forth the dates, salary, etc., the contracts read as follows: The term first party referring to the county association and second party to the farm expert.

"That said first party hereby agrees to furnish and maintain for the use of said second party, in performing said service, a suitable horse and buggy or some other sufficient conveyance for going about over the county in performance of said duties."

"It is further agreed that said first party shall also immediately equip and shall maintain an office in the city of Charlevoix, Michigan, for the use and occupancy of said second party. Said office is to be equipped with suitable furniture, telephones, maps, charts, library and said first party shall furnish said office fully equipped, rent free."

"As nearly as possible the party of the second part agrees to submit his plans to the first party stating in detail where he will be and what is arranged for each day, at least one week in advance and to furnish such program to the newspapers of the said county, so that the people will know what work he is doing and where he will be, in order that they may have an opportunity to attend such meeting and obtain his advice."

"He shall make as many personal calls as his time will permit and answer all inquiries on agricultural subjects by telephone or in writing. His duties shall consist in general as advisor to any farmer in the county requiring his services; organizing farmer's clubs; conducting corn clubs and other agricultural contests; to arrange for exhibitions of agricultural products to give practical demonstrations and instructions in crop rotation, soil building, farm management, live stock, dairying, horticultural work, etc., in various parts of the county under ordinary conditions; to cooperate with the superintendents of county and city schools in teaching the rudiments of agriculture."

"He shall lay out a practical schedule for farm practice on the county poor farm upon the request of the county officials in charge thereof with the view of putting the farm on a self-sustaining basis."

"It shall be his duty to establish seed plots both on the county farm and various private farms to breed up to the highest efficiency the variety of seed wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye or other products which may be best adapted to the soil and climate of the county so that eventually a uniform variety of each product may be established and marketed, free from mixture of other grains and weed seeds."

"He shall be ready at all times to cooperate with the existing agencies such as breeders' associations, farmers' institutes, county fair associations and any other associations having for their object the best agricultural, commercial and material interest of the county."

From the above it will be seen that the adviser will be a mighty busy man when once the work is fully established.

Will Sell For Cash at Old Price Until April 1

If you need or want a pair of Shoes this summer, now is the time to buy.

Don't fail to come in and buy at once so you can have your choice of the lot at the old price.

It Will Pay You to Buy Now--It Will Save You a Lot of Money

if you have many pairs to buy, for every shoe that we buy now must be advanced in price or else the wearing quality will be poorer. We must advance the price of all good and up-to-date shoes after April 1. Don't put off purchasing, but make your choice at once before the stock is broken in sizes or advanced in prices.

Does "decent" journalism pay?
This is a query that is not of much interest to newspapermen. Most of them believe that it does not pay, and cannot be made to pay. Therefore it is dismissed without being given a single thought.

By "decent" journalism is meant papers that do not print sensational news simply because it is sensational, that do not emphasize vice and crime, that tell the truth without fear as they see it, that do not color or kill their news to suit their advertisers; that do not print advertisements that they may have reason to believe may mislead or defraud their readers—that in every way play fair with their readers.

Some five years ago there was this kind of a paper published in Boston, The Christian Science Monitor.
Its creed is about in accord with the above outline, and in addition it rules out typographic hysteria. It was established by the Christian Science church, and its original plans were made by Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy. Though having "Christian Science" in its title, and though it is absolutely owned by that church, it is not an organ in the ordinary sense. Nor does it print Christian Science news or attempt to further a sectarian propaganda.
There is each day, in a specified position, one short article bearing upon the principles of the denomination.
All the rest is just a newspaper. It is a clean, dignified, able, interesting, well-edited paper. It is well printed, without "bull" type either in its text or advertisements.
It is tastefully set, its advertisements being set in a general light-face effect, with the use of a limited variety of type belonging to the same family; its headings being authoritatively bold to readily indicate the character of the text. The press-work is exceptionally good, so that the paper looks clean, wholesome and attractive. There are pictures, made to be used in that paper—clean and sharp and well printed, but not garish or smuggy, made so by trying to make an impossible
graphic print.

No advertisements of tobacco in any form, liquor in any form, patent medicines, mining stock, land speculations, real estate that offers laod in a speculative spirit, or other classes that the managers feel may lead to loss among the readers, are permitted. The merchants who advertise are not permitted to ring the charges upon comparative prices which have "value" for one element. They may state actual former prices in comparison with bargain prices, but they are sometimes required to show their in-voices to get that privilege.

The managers sweep away many of the long established newspaper traditions. The editorial rooms are much like small private sitting rooms. There is no evidence of the usual bustle of the ordinary newspaper office, and none of the dirt and litter. There is plenty of light and air. There is no smoking and no profanity. There is an abundant unassuming courtesy for every person who calls. The work rooms are well ordered, neat, free of all kinds of litter. The machinery is always on dress parade. No danger of grease getting on the trousers or skirts. The whole building is quiet, restful, serene. The plant is a model. Every machine is placed to do its allotted portion of the work in its turn, without unnecessary crating or carrying. When the building was erected it was designed in units, and subsequent units have been added without interruption to the daily work. When a new unit has been added, new machinery has been placed without disturbing the machinery already working. This can go on up to the extent of the land owned by the society, and upwards to the limit of height allowed by the city, without having in the end disturbed the original installation.

The paper is shrewdly conducted.
It is optimistic to a degree. Nobody dies—they "pass over"; and when eminent citizens pass over they are allowed to go on their long journey with but a brief god-speed. Quarrels and scandals are ignored. News is given for its worth; that is, for what the editors believe it is worth.
Sometimes there is a well-written column report of an event given but a few lines by the other papers, and vice versa—very often vice versa. There is always much human interest in the paper, and it must be said that it is always very proper human interest. It is often so proper as to be dull. They like it. They read it in larger numbers every month. When the Monitor appeared in Boston it had very few readers outside of members of the the Christian Science organization.
The newspapermen and advertising men looked it over professionally.
For quite some months it made no mark. Then people began to buy it. The business men took it home.
They found it a great relief, after a strenuous day. Its urbane policy was very soothing. It had all the local news any paper had. It had all the national news any paper had. It had a large body of reading that the other papers did not have.

P. M. TO RAISE DUMMY RATE

Resorters Will Have to Pay More
This Summer.

Fare Between Petoskey and Charlevoix Not Considered With Mileage.

It is probable that the Pere Marquette railroad will raise its round-trip rate on the "dummy" run between Petoskey and Charlevoix next summer. The receivers consider that the rate heretofore in force, twenty-five cents, was hardly consistent with the mileage. However, books of tickets, like the ones in use on the G. R. & I. runs will be furnished, these to be interchangeable with the latter road. This statement was made by officials as the result of discussing the following story printed in Wednesday's issue of the Detroit Journal:

"Pere Marquette railroad will not run excursion trains the coming summer. Receiver Frank W. Blair so told the legislative investigating committee on Tuesday afternoon.

"He said that the service was too costly in the accident risk. It had been found that most Pere Marquette accidents, with loss of life and property damage, came from the excursion business.

"He also said that the Charlevoix and Petoskey resorters would not next summer enjoy the snap they have heretofore had, in a 32-mile round trip between the two resort centers for twenty-five cents.

"The only purpose the train service is to enable the resorters to pass away the time," said Mr. Blair.
"Vice-President J. L. Cramer, backed up E. W. Stevens' statement that the two-cent fare law had caused a loss about equal to the defects, but was unable to give any delineation figures that would show the separate cost of passenger and freight operation, and where the loss was."

Birthday Party.

Tuesday evening John H. Bugbee was given a birthday party at his home in this city, about forty guests being present. The evening was enjoyably spent in playing progressive pedro, Millard Olney winning the first prize and Milton Block and Mrs. J. H. Bugbee the booby.

The guests left Mr. Bugbee a nice present as a souvenir of the occasion.

$24,000 TO BE SPENT BY COUNTY ROAD COMMISSIONERS

Who Will You Taxpayers Have Spend It—William Wiles of Norwood, An Experienced Road Builder, Candidate For Two Year Term—See That You Paste His Slip Over The Name of Oakley D. Hammond.

We, the Citizens Good Roads Committee of Hayes, Marton, Eveline, Norwood and Charlevoix townships, believing that in matters of such vital importance to our county, and especially the taxpayers, of expending large sums of money for the construction and maintenance of a high grade of highways such as the County Good Road System requires, should be under the supervision of competent and experienced men who are known to have been doing and directing this kind of work for years and as such a man, would recommend Mr. William Wiles of Norwood township for County Road Commissioner for the term of two years.

To the voters of Charlevoix county—

Having decided to enter the race for County Road Commissioner for the two year term, I will appreciate the support of the voters of this county. I have had many years of experience in road building work, having several times been re-elected highway commissioner of Norwood township and I know considering the amount of money I had to work with, that I have built as good roads as any commissioner in the county. If elected to this important office, I will give the taxpayers of this county full value for their money in any road work which it may be my duty to look after.

There will be no graft worked in my part of the game, as I will not be under obligation to any man excepting the taxpayers of this county if they choose to elect me.

Yours truly,
William Wiles
Charlevoix, Mich., R. F. D. 1.

Marion Township.

Those who know Bill Wiles will vote for him for County Road Commissioner, and to those who do not know him I would say that I have known him for 15 years as an expert road builder and a man of strict business integrity. He should have the unqualified support of every voter as he would make every dollar mean a hundred cents on the road and give the county a square deal. Yours on the right side of every public question and good roads.

Yours truly,
A. B. Clark,
Charlevoix, Michigan, R. F. D. 1.

If you don't want the political ring to control the election of County Road Commissioners, use a slip for William Wiles.

You taxpayers get out and vote, show that they can't put one over on
you. We will supply the ammunition.

If you wish to vote for William Wiles, paste a slip across the name of Oakley D. Hammond on your ballot.

Be sure and paste your slip, mark a cross in the square and see that your ballot reads:

County Road Commissioner,
Two Year Term

It has been rumored that if chosen County Road Commissioner I would not personally give my time to the office. All such rumors are false and, if elected, I shall faithfully serve the people.

Advertisement

I have known William Wiles for several years and consider that he is one of the best road builders in this part of the county. In my opinion the taxpayers of this county could not elect a better man to the job of County Road Commissioner as this is a position which should be held by a man who has had several years of experience at this kind of work.

Yours for good roads,
Peter Block,
Charlevoix, Michigan, R. F. D. 1.

Glad to know that William Wiles has entered the race for County Road Commissioner for the 2-year term. The roads of Norwood township were never in better shape than during the several years he was highway commissioner.

I have known Mr. Wiles for 20 years; consider that he is one of the best and most practical men at road work in this section of the county.
I hope that every taxpayer who is working for the interests of Charlevoix county will support him with their slip at the polls.

Yours respectfully,
Will Withers,
Charlevoix, Michigan, R. F. D. 1.

Hayes Township.

I am glad to know William Wiles is going to run for County Road
Commissioner for the 2-year term.
If elected to this office the taxpayers of this county will have secured one of the most practical men in this part of the county, as Mr. Wiles has had years of experience at road building and will build more road for less money than any man I know of in this section of the county. He is a hustler, I never worked for a better man and one who can handle a crew of men to better advantage. I trust that he will receive the support he deserves from the taxpayers of this county.

Yours respectfully,
Albert O'Brien,
Highway Commissioner
of Hayes Township,
Charlevoix, Michigan, R. F. D. 1.

Norwood Township.

I have known Bill Wiles for 15 years, he has been Highway Commissioner in the township of Norwood for six or seven years and I consider that he has been one of the best commissioners we ever had in this township. He is a man who always worked for the best interests of the taxpayers and I know that if he is elected to the job of County Road Commissioner he will bring to this job the experience of a practical man who has had years of valuable experience at road building work. Trusting that every voter in the county who wants to see a practical and experienced man handle the job will support him on the slip with their vote. I remain, Yours respectfully,

Will Mayne

TWENTY FLYERS WILL ENTER

International Great Lakes Flying Boat Cruise Next July.

Government Aviators Will Follow the Cruise and Make Observations.

The International Great Lakes Flying Boat Cruise which starts from Chicago on July 9th and finishes at Detroit ten days later, the first event of the kind ever scheduled in the world, will have at least twelve starters. Announcement of the receipt of that number of entries was made Tuesday by E. P. Noel, chairman of the committee. It is the belief of Mr. Noel that the number of contestants will reach twenty.

Every aeroplane manufacturer in the country is rushing through their flying boats for the long cruise. The flood at Dayton, Ohio, will probably cause the Wright air-boat to be rebuilt or partly so. Tony Jannus, the holder of the world's record for air and water flights, having made the trip last winter from Omaha to New Orleans, has been named as pilot in chief of the Beno-ist team of three machines. Jannus is considered the greatest flying boat operator in the world. Jannus' assistant will be the noted Hugh Robinson who won for America the championship at the Monte Carlo hydroaeroplane meet a year ago.
Robinson and Jannus will shortly make a trip by rail around the route of the tour to study different conditions which will be experienced during the contest.

Both Thomas Benoist and Glenn H. Curtiss will follow the cruise in active charge of their entries. Curtiss writes from his winter experimental station at San Diego, California, that his newest flying boat will be a revelation, embodying the development of his ideas on automatic stability and removing all danger of falling from the air.

Two army and navy aviators are expected to be assigned by the government to follow the cruise and make observations and reports.

COUNTY POLITICS WARMING UP

Davis of Boyne City and Wiles of Norwood Will Run on Slips.

FOR ROAD COMMISSIONERS

Advocates of Equal Suffrage Are Putting up a Hot Campaign.

Little Interest as Yet in City Campaign—Five Important Amendments Submitted to The State Constitution.

The election next Monday will be of far more importance than spring elections usually are, live important amendments to the state constitution being submitted to the people and, in the county the election of an entire board of county road commissioners and every voter should turn out.

In the city but little interest is being shown but in the county things are warming up, although there was a remarkably small vote at the primary, all the candidates, with the exception of Mr. Hammond, winning without any opposition. During the last few days an organized effort has been effected to elect candidates on slips in opposition to the regularly nominated ticket.

In Boyne City Mr. Davis has announced his candidacy on slips against Mr. Lorch while a strong effort is being made to secure the election of William Wiles of Norwood for the two year term by the same method.

The advocates of equal suffrage are working hard for the success of their cause and the friends of the other amendments are not idle.
Secretary of State Martindale furnishes us with the following concise account of the effect of the proposed amendments.

Section 1 of Article III, the effect of which, if adopted, is to extend the right to vote to every woman, a citizen of the United States, and of the state of Michigan, above the age of twenty-one years.

Section 2 of Article XVII, relative to the initiative on constitutional amendments. This amendment, if adopted, will give the qualified voters of this state the right to propose amendments to the Constitution by filing a petition with the secretary of state, signed by not less than ten per cent of the legal voters of this state.

Sections 1 and 19, Article V. This amendment, if adopted, will give the qualified voters of this state the right to propose to the legislature for enactment into law legislative measures, resolutions and laws, by filing a petition with the secretary of state, signed by at least eight per cent of the legal voters; and any such proposed law rejected by the legislature shall be submitted to the people by the secretary of state for approval or rejection at the next general election. This amendment also provides for the repealing of any act, section, or part of any act of the legislature to the people for approval or rejection at the next general election by filing a petition with the secretary of state, signed by five per cent of the qualified electors of the state.

Section 11 of Article X. This amendment, if adopted, will empower the legislature to provide for the relief, insuring or pensioning of members of fire departments.

Section 8 of Article III. The effect of the proposed amendment will be to require the legislature to enact into law a provision for the recall of all elective officers, except judges of courts of record and courts of like jurisdiction upon petition of twenty-five per cent of the lawful voters of the state.

CHAPTER XI.
My Befuddlement Increases.
"You must understand, Mr. Ames, that my daughters, both of them, are very dear to me," said Bassford Hollister. "It is the great grief of my life that, owing to matters beyond my control, I have been unable to cure for them as I should like to do. This being the case, I have been obliged to let them to accept many favors from my only sister Octavia. This, in ordinary circumstances, would not be repugnant to my pride, but my sister is a very unusual person. She must do for my children in her own way, and while I was prepared, in agreeing that they should accept her bounty, for some whimsical manifestation of her eccentric character, I did not imagine that she would go so far as to shut me out from all knowledge of her plans for them. That, Mr. Ames, is what has happened."

His voice rose and fell mournfully. He puffed his pipe for a moment and continued:

"There is now something forward here which I do not understand. I have no idea that Octavia has contrived some preposterous scheme for choosing a husband for Cecilia, that is, for keeping with her old fashion of transacting all her business. I do not know its nature, and by the terms of her agreement Cecilia is not to disclose the method to be employed to me—not even to me, her own father. You must agree, Ames, that that is rather rubbing it in."

"But you don't assume that your daughter is not to be a free agent in the matter? You don't believe that some unworthy and improper man is to be forced upon her?"

"That, sir, is exactly what I fear." "You will pardon me, but I cannot for a moment believe that Miss Hollister would risk her niece's happiness even to satisfy her own peculiar humor. Your sister is a shrewd woman, and her heart, I am convinced, is the kindest. Among the suitors now camped at the Prescott Arms there must be some one whom your daughter approves, and I see no reason why he should not ultimately be her choice. Now that you have broached the matter, I make free to say that one of these suitors is an old friend of mine; Hartley Wiggin, by name, and that he is a man of the highest character and a gentleman in the strictest sense."

He had been listening to me with the greatest composure, but at the mention of Wiggin's name he started and nervously clutched my arm. "That man may be all that you say," he cried chokingly, "but he has acted infamously toward both my daughters. He is a rogue and a most despicable fellow. He has flirted outrageously with Hezekiah while at the same time pretending to be deeply interested in Cecilia."

"But, my dear sir, is it not possible that you do him a great wrong? May it not be the other way round that Hezekiah is trifling with Wiggin's affections? He's a splendid fellow, Hartley Wiggin, but he's a little slow, that's all. And between two superlative young women like your daughters a man may be pardoned for doubts and hesitation. The thing is bound to straighten itself out."

He tossed his head impatiently. "Hiss it occurred to you that Octavia's interest in this Hartley Wiggin may be due to a trifling and immaterial fact?"

"Nothing beyond his indubitable eligibility."

"Then let me tell you what I suspect. Both his names contain seven letters. My sister is slightly cracked as to the number seven. I swear to you my belief that the fact that his names contain seven letters each is at the bottom of all this. Incredible, my dear sir, but wholly possible."

"Then, much being the case, why doesn't she show her hand openly? You send conjecture far when once you entertain so absurd an idea."

"You think my assumption unlikely?" "I certainly do, Mr. Hollister. You may as well assume that, as Wiggin is specially favored in the number of letters in his singularly prosaic and unromantic name, it is Miss Hollister's plan to keep him dallying seven years."

He seized me by the arm and forced me back against the hiltlements, then stood off and eyed me fiercely. "You speak of serving and of service! Will you tell me just why you are here and what brings you into this affair? What are you doing in my sister's house, where I have to come like a thief in the night to see one of my own children?"

"I hastened to declare my profession and that I had been summoned by Miss Hollister to examine her chimney."

"I could not, however, tell him that until my arrival the chimneys had behaved themselves admirably."

"You've admitted your friendship for this Wiggin person—that's enough," he said when I had concluded. "I advise you to leave the house at once. I tell you he's got to be eliminated from the situation. Understand that I do not threaten you with violence, but I will not promise to abstain from visiting heavy punishment upon that fellow. And you? A chimney doctor? I am a man of considerable knowledge of the world, and I say to you very candidly that I don't believe there is any such profession."

"Then let me tell you," I replied, not without heat, "that I am a graduate in architecture. I am your sister's guest, and as she is perfectly competent to manage her own affairs I shall stay here as long as it pleases her to ask me to remain. And now, one other matter. How did you gain this roof tonight, when by your own admission you are not on such terms with your sister as would justify you in entering it openly?"

"The moonlight did not fall to entice the content in his face, but I thought he grinned as he answered quietly: 'You don't seem to understand young man, that you are entitled to no explanations from me. You strike me as a singularly fresh young person. It would be a positive grief to me to feel that my conduct had displeased you. And now, as the night grows chilly, I shall beg you to precede me into the house by the way you came.'"

"But first," I persisted, "let me ask a question. It is possible that you yourself have some preference among your daughter's several suitors, Mr. Hollister. Would you object to telling me which one you would choose for Miss Cecilia?"

my arrival the chimneys had behaved themselves admirably."

"You've admitted your friendship for this Wiggin person—that's enough," he said when I had concluded. "I advise you to leave the house at once. I tell you he's got to be eliminated from the situation. Understand that I do not threaten you with violence, but I will not promise to abstain from visiting heavy punishment upon that fellow. And you? A chimney doctor? I am a man of considerable knowledge of the world, and I say to you very candidly that I don't believe there is any such profession."

"Then let me tell you," I replied, not without heat, "that I am a graduate in architecture. I am your sister's guest, and as she is perfectly competent to manage her own affairs I shall stay here as long as it pleases her to ask me to remain. And now, one other matter. How did you gain this roof tonight, when by your own admission you are not on such terms with your sister as would justify you in entering it openly?"

"The moonlight did not fall to entice the content in his face, but I thought he grinned as he answered quietly: 'You don't seem to understand young man, that you are entitled to no explanations from me. You strike me as a singularly fresh young person. It would be a positive grief to me to feel that my conduct had displeased you. And now, as the night grows chilly, I shall beg you to precede me into the house by the way you came.'"

"But first," I persisted, "let me ask a question. It is possible that you yourself have some preference among your daughter's several suitors, Mr. Hollister. Would you object to telling me which one you would choose for Miss Cecilia?"

"Beyond question the man for Cecilia, if I have any voice in the matter is Lord Arrowood."

"Arrowood?" I exclaimed. "You surprise me greatly. I saw him at the inn, and he seemed to me the most insignificant and uninteresting one of a lot."

"That proves you a person of poor gifts of discernment, Mr. Ames." And his tone and manner were quite reminiscent of his sister's ways—and his further explanation proved him even more worthily the brother of his sister.

"As I was unfortunate," he began, "owing to an unfortunate physical handicap, to abandon my art, that of a naive painter, I have given my attention for a number of years to the study of the Irish situation. I met Arrowood by chance in the highway yesterday, and I found that he holds exactly the ideas which favor Irish independence." This certainly had the true Hollister touch.

"And so," Bassford Hollister concluded, "I naturally incline toward Arrowood, though he is so poor that he was obliged to come over in the steerage to continue his wooing of my daughter."

He let himself down into the dark trap, and walked by my side to the stairway, both of us maintaining silence. I was deeply curious to know how he had entered and whether he expected to go down the front way and out the main door. We kept together to the third floor hall. I could have sworn to that. Then suddenly, just as we reached the stairway, out went the lights, and we were in utter darkness. I smothered an exclamation, clutched my matches and struck a light, and as the stick flamed slowly I looked about for Bassford Hollister. But he had vanished as suddenly and completely as though a trap had sprung beneath us and swallowed him. I found the third floor switch, and it responded immediately, flooding the stair-wall to the lower hall, but I neither saw nor heard anything more of Hollister.

Stounded by this performance, I clutched on to the lower door to have a look around, and there, calmly reading by the library table, sat Miss Octavia. "Late hours, Mr. Ames," she cried. "I supposed you had retired long ago."

"Pardon my troubling you, but may I inquire, Miss Hollister, how long you have been sitting here?"

"The clock on the stair began to strike 12, and she listened composedly to a few of the deep toned strokes before replying.

"Just half an hour." I thought some one knocked at my door about an hour ago. The lights were on and I came down, saw a magazine that had escaped my eye before and here you find me."

"Some one knocked at your door?" "I thought so. You know, the servants have no idea that the place is haunted, and I thought that if I sat here the ghost might take it upon himself to walk. I confess to a slight disappointment that it is only you who have appeared. I suppose it wasn't you who knocked at my door?"

"No," I replied, laughing a little at her manner, "not unless it was you who switched off the lights as I was coming down from the fourth floor. I have been studying this chimney from the roof. I know something of the ways of electric switches, and they don't usually move of their own accord."

"Your coming to this house has been the greatest joy to me, Mr. Ames. I should not have imagined in a chance look at you that you were, psychical, and yet such is clearly the fact. I am sure you that I have not touched any switch since I left my room. It was unnecessary, as I found the lights on. And I acquit you of rapping, rattling at my chamber door. It gives me the greatest satisfaction to assume that the house is haunted, and at any time you find the ghost I beg that you will lose no time in presenting me."

She wore a remarkable lavender dressing gown and a midnight such as I had never seen outside a museum. As she concluded her speech, spoken in that curious lulling tone which from the beginning had left me in doubt as to the seriousness of all her statements, she rose and, still clasping her magazine, made no courtesy and was mounting the stair.

I heard the door close a minute later, and then, feeling that I had earned the right to repose, I went to my room and to bed.

I slept late and on going down found the table set in the breakfast room. Miss Octavia entered briskly, her slight figure concealed by a prodigious gingham apron.

"Good morning, merry gentleman," she began blithely. "The most delightful thing has happened. Without the slightest warning, without the faintest intimation of their dissatisfaction, the house servants have departed, with the single exception of my personal maid who, being a Swede and therefore singularly devoid of emotion, was unshaken by the ghost terror that have sent the rest of my staff scampering over the hills."

She lighted the coffee machine lamp in her most tranquil fashion and begged me to be seated.

"I have already breakfasted," she continued, "and Cecilia is even now preparing you an omelet with her own hand. I beg to reassure you as my guest that the departure of the servants causes me not the slightest annoyance. Cecilia is an excellent cook, and I myself shall not starve so long as I have strength to crack an egg or lift a stove lid. And besides, I still retain my early trust in Providence. I do not doubt that before nightfall a corps of excellent servants will again be on duty here. Very likely they are even now bound for this place, coming from the wet coasts of Ireland, from Liverpool and from lonely villages in Scandinavia. I hope you will testify to the fact that I faced this day in the cheeriest and most hopeful spirit."

"Not only shall I do so, Miss Hollister," I replied, trying to catch her eye, "but it will throughout my life give me the greatest satisfaction to set your cause right. To that extent let me be devoted to your household."

"Thank you, sir," she returned, with the utmost gravity. "And may I say further that the incident gives the stamp of authenticity to my ghost? I was obliged to pay those people double wages to lure them from the felds of the city, and they must have been a good deal alarmed to have left so precipitately. You must excuse me now, as it is necessary for me to do the pastry cook's work this morning, that individual having fled with the rest, and it being incumbent on me to maintain my fee-simple in this property, to make a dozen pies before high noon. But first I must visit the stables where I believe the coachman still lingers, having been prevented from joining the stampede of the house servants by the painful twinges of gout."

With this she left me, and I began pecking at a grapefruit. It had been in my mind as I dressed that morning to play truant and visit the city. It was almost imperative that I take a look at my office, and I had resolved upon a plan which would, I believed, give me the key to the ghost mystery. If Pepperton had built that house he must know whether he had contrived any secret passages that would afford exits and entrances not apparent to the eye. It would be an easy matter to run into the city, explain myself to my assistant and get hold of Pepperton. My mind was made up, and I had even consulted a time table and chosen one of the express trains.

CHAPTER XII.
I Play Truant.

AS I sat at the table absorbed in my plans for the day my nerves received a sudden shock. I had heard no one enter, yet a voice at my shoulder murmured casually:

"Hast thou seen ghosts? Hast thou at midnight heard—"

It was the voice of Hezekiah. I knew before I faced her. She wore a blue sailor waist, with a broad red ribbon tied under the collar, and a blue tam-o-shanter capped her head. She bore a tray that contained my omelet, a plate of toast and other sundries incidental to a substantial breakfast, which she distributed deftly upon the table.

"How did you get here?" I blurted my nerves still out of control.

"The kitchen door, sir. I had ridden into the garden, and, seeing Aunt Octavia heading for the stables and Cecilia at the kitchen window, I pedaled boldly in. Cecilia wanted to borrow my bicycle, and, being a good little sister, I gave it to her. She also said that you required food, so I told her to go and I would carry you your breakfast. I shall skip myself in a minute. You may draw your own coffee. Mind the machine. It tips if you are not careful."

She went to the window and peered out toward the stables.

"May I ask, daughter of kings where your sister has gone so suddenly?"

"Certainly! She's off for town to chase a cook and a few other people to run this hotel. I heard at the post office that the whole camp had deserted, so I ran over to see what was doing. And just for that I've got to walk home."

"But your aunt said that Providence would take care of the servant question. She expected a whole corps of ideal servants to come straying in during the day."

"Cecilia hasn't Aunt Octavia's confidence in Providence, so she's taking a shot at the employment agencies. She has left a note on the kitchen table to inform Aunt Octavia that she had for gotten an engagement with the dentist and has gone to catch the 10:15."

"That Hezekiah is a little—it isn't quite square in his view of your aunt this way," I remarked soberly.

Hezekiah laughed.

TEN YEARS OF ROAD PROGRESS

How Sauk County Farmers Got Out of the Mud.

STICK-TO-IT-IVENESS DID IT.

After Generations of Climbing Through Swamps and Ruts on Market Day, Southern Wisconsin Citizens Banded Together and Worked Hard.

For two generations the farmers traveled bad roads in Sauk county, one of the progressive agricultural counties of southern Wisconsin. The second generation and their sons have realized and are now commencing the stop-muddy hills and long, sandy stretches, says a writer in the Country Gentleman. From a county with perhaps the poorest roads in the state to a county with an unexcelled system of county highways is the proud achievement of less than ten years.

A definite system of county highway has been established and plans made for their permanent improvement. Five complete road improvement outfits consisting of rock crushers and asphalt road rollers are owned and operated by the county under the direction of the county highway engineer. Wheelbar-scrapers, road graders and gravel wagons are purchased by the county and furnished to the individual towns for use on large jobs.

A classic example of what is being done by this county may serve to spur other counties and communities on to an endeavor to emulate or even surpass the thrifty farmers of Sauk.

The fertile valley of the Honey creek and its tributaries lies in the southern part of this county. Grandfather, father and son living in this valley have been compelled each market day to face the problem of bad roads. Bad roads have meant to them, as they have meant to thousands of other farmers, an unbearable big bill. In the early sixties and seventies, when grandfather raised

SECTION OF THE ROAD ON "BIG HILL," SAUK COUNTY, WIS.

wheat, neighbor helped neighbor to "double up" the big hill. A grade in many places of nearly one to six, or often in a hundred feet, and a sticky mud red clay have brought many a faithful farm horse to his knees and have sorely tried the patience of the driver.

A narrow road, hemmed in on each side by overhanging trees—on the north side of the hill when winter's snow lingered long into the spring—the state of the big hill was the factor deciding for or against the projected trip to the market town. Conditions slowly changed. The road grader came, and with power, furnished by horses or in some cases by a traction engine the hill road was soon widened. Better drainage was provided. Ties were cut away, giving the sun and wind an opportunity to dry out the ever present mud.

The rise of the dairy industry, the weekly marketing of hogs, the commence of rural free delivery and the purchase of automobiles have all been factors contributing to a demand for still greater improvement. Even though a hill 223 feet high with a 15 per cent grade in many places interposed itself between the Troy and Honey creek farmers and their market, the stage was set last reached where they could no longer afford to hesitate. Under the speculative leadership of a county highway engineer and with the advice and assistance of the state highway commissioner they resolved to conquer this ancient foe.

A survey showed that much of the grade could be reduced to eight feet or less in a hundred. The roadbed was carefully prepared for the laying of a macadam nine feet wide and from twelve to fifteen inches deep.
Four thousand three hundred and thirty-two dollars has been expended in crushing limestone rock, hauling the gravel and in the laying of the macadam limestone on one and a quarter miles of road. Of this sum the town has furnished $1,700, the county a similar sum and the state $800. The conquering of the big hill, including grading and macadamizing, has cost about $4,500 a mile.

GOOD ROAD DON'TS.

Don't let the road drag rest.
Don't cuss the mudholes. Clean the ditcher.
Don't despise sand-clay construction because it is cheap.
Don't think that any negro laborer can build a model road.
Don't consider the fee of a good engineer a useless extravagance.
Don't think that a bond issue is going to liquidate itself. Safeguard the sinking fund.
Don't believe that a good road once built will stay there forever. Provide for maintenance.
Don't look upon all roads alike.
Improve your main-traveled roads first and attend to the byways later.
Don't think that a good road can be built anywhere. Be sure your location is right and then go ahead.
Don't forget that proper drainage is the first, second, third and thirty-seventh essential to a good road bed.
Don't fail to house your road machinery during the winter.
Why should road tools be allowed to rust out simply because they belong to the county?

THE GREAT COST OF ROAD MAINTENANCE

Macadam Must Be Constantly Watched—Brick Weers Well.

At the recent road congress S. Percy Hooker, who has had long experience as superintendent of highways in New York and New Hampshire, declared that the cost of maintaining all varities of improved roads is about the same if the interest on the investment is counted. He thinks that the greater cost of building a brick road makes an interest charge equivalent to the cost of maintaining a macadam road.

All this may be true, but one fact remains in favor of the brick road—it will be maintained by not wearing out whereas the macadam road is likely to wear out by not being maintained. A constant bill for maintenance is harder to pay, it appears, than a bill for later est on money invested. If it will be maintained there is no objection to any form of good road, but maintenance seems to be a doubtful thing, and the way to have a good road is to get it in its most nearly permanent form at the start. The money spent on many macadam roads has been practically thrown away for lack of their proper maintenance. The money spent on brick roads is still paying dividends in good service. And that is why it is better to build brick roads in our present necessary and growing state of road work.

EIGHTY-THREE YEARS OF AGE

Charles L. Peaslee of This City Celebrates Birthday Monday.

Attributes His Good Health to His Abstinence
From Tobacco and Liquors.

Charles L. Peaslee, one of our most highly respected citizens, celebrated his eighty-third birthday Monday, having been born in Lincoln, Maine, March 31, 1830. Mr.
Peaslee is a hale and hearty today as most men at 65. He has been a resident of this county for thirty years and served through the civil war as a member of the 16th Maine Infantry, being wounded in the arm.
Mr. Peaslee, in speaking of his good health, says: "I attribute it in a great measure to the fact that I have never used tobacco in any form, never having even smoked a cigar. I think it far better not to use tobacco or intoxicating drinks and then when a man dies he has a clean body and soul."

Charged with pilfering a watch, Albert Black, of Charlevoix, was arrested Friday morning by Deputy Sheriff Van Gorden, at the Hankey dam, where he was assisting in the work of changing the river's course. In Justice Krieger's court he pleaded not guilty, and his trial will be held next week. It is alleged that Black took the watch from Mrs. O. A. Judd, at whose residence, corner of Emmet and Fulton streets, he had been boarding.

Charles Kutherford, another boarder at the Judd home, made the complaint. It is probable that Justice Krieger will refuse to accept bail, as it appears Black has been before him on a previous occasion—Petoskey News.

An Early Showing of Wooltex Spring Coats

We have received from the Wooltex designers a number of light, spring coats to fill the special demand that usually appears at this time.

These, although early in their appearance, are not "advance" models. There is nothing experimental about them. Being Wooltex productions, they are authoritative spring styles—and beauties too.

Light colors, chiefly, as the fashion will demand. Long "mannish" models, and shorter, over-dress styles.

They have all the Wooltex characteristics of "snap," grace of line, distinctiveness and guaranteed service for at least two seasons.

Prices $15.00 to $17.50

The Siege of The Seven Suitors

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

was, in fact, a troubled look on her sweet, whimsical face. It occurred to me that the loss of her servants was not really the slight matter she had previously made of it.

"Mr. Ames, will you pardon me for asking you a question of the most intimate character? It is only after much hesitation that I do so."

I bowed encouragingly, my curiosity fully aroused.

"You may ask me anything in the world, Miss Hollister."

"Then I wish you would tell me whether I can't express the dislike I feel in doing this—but you tell me whether you have seen in the hands of my niece Cecilia a small, a very small, silver-backed notebook."

"Yes, I have," I answered, greatly surprised.

"And may I ask whether—and again I must plead deep concern as an excuse for making such an inquiry—whether you by any chance saw her making any notation in that book?"

I recalled the silver-bound book perfectly, but had attached no importance to it, but if Cecilia's fortunes were so intimately related to it as Miss Hollister's manner implied, I felt that I must be careful of my answer. I was trying to recall the precise moment at which I had entered the library the preceding evening after Hume's departure, and while I was latent upon this silence must have been prolonged. I felt obliged to make an answer of some sort, and yet I did not relish the thought of conveying information that might distress and embarrass a noble girl like Cecilia Hollister. Something in my face must have conveyed a hint of this inner conflict to Miss Hollister, for she rose suddenly, holding up her hand as though to silence me. She seemed deeply moved and cried in agitation:

"Do not answer me. The question was quite unfair—quite unfair—and yet I assure you that at the moment I made the inquiry I felt justified."

She retreated toward the door as I rose, and then, with her composure fully restored, she courtesied gracefully.

"Farewell here will be a buffet of air today, as I shall be engaged with matters of pastry. I'm sure, however, that you will find employment until dinner time, when my house will be fully in order again."

"Can I give you a lift?"

I intended that this should be a busy day, so without making explanations I went to the stable, told the coachman I wished to be driven to the station and was soon whizzing over the hills toward Katonah.

I wondered how Whigles and the other gentlemen at the Prescott Arms were faring. My question was partially answered a second later as we passed the road that forked off to the inn. On a stone by the roadside sat Lord Arrowood, desolately guarding a kit bag and a suit case. He was dressed in a shabby Norfolk jacket and knickerbockers and smoked a pipe.

I bade the driver pause and greeted the nobleman affably.

"Can I give you a lift? You seem to be bound for the station, and I'm taking a train myself."

"No, thanks," he replied sharply. "They're a lot of bouncers—bouncers. I say!"

"Ah! Of whom do you speak, Lord Arrowood?" I asked, glancing at my watch.

"Those scoundrels at the inn. They have thrown me out—thrown me out—"

"Hard lines, for a fact, but if you are interested in trains?"

"I refuse to leave the country," he shouted. "If they think they're going to get rid of me they're mistaken. Boundaries, I say, boundaries!"

He uttered the words with great bitterness and passion, as though to emphasize his utterance upon the bowler. Pathetic on a mound that is not more eternally planted. He seemed in no mood for conversation, so I sped on, with no time to lose.

I gained the step of the chair car attached to the 10:18 with some loss of dignity, the porter yanking me aboard under the conductor's scornful eye. The Katonah passengers were still in the aisle, and as I surveyed them I saw Cecilia take a seat in the middle of the car. She was just unfolding a newspaper when I moved to a seat behind her and took her good morning. The look she gave me in turning round had in it something of Hume's—mild, unobtrusive humor. This interested me, because I had not previously seen any but the most superficial resemblance between the sisters. Her cheeks were glowing from her spin on the wheel.

"We are both tenants. You must have breakfasted in a hurry to have caught this train."

"Not at all. I enjoyed a brief conversation with your sister, and after she had gone your aunt came back and lingered for a moment."

"She told you, I suppose, that Providence would look after the servant question. I'm going to assist Providence a little."

"You become the dearest of Providence? I indulge your spirit."

"It's mere self-preservation. Aunt Octavia would have me chained to the kitchen if I didn't do something about it."

She had permitted me to settle with the conductor, and when I had completed this transaction I found that she had drawn from her purse the little silver booklet about which Miss Octavia had inquired so anxiously. She raised her eyes with the faraway look in them.

"Can you tell me how to spell Arrowood—is it one or two w's?"

"One I think the noble lord uses."

She seemed to write the name, and I saw her counting on her fingers, touching them lightly on the open page of the book.

Then she dropped it into her purse, which she thrust back carefully into her pocket. She sighed and was silent. I gave her in detail the story of the ghost, and my recital seemed to amuse her greatly.

"You thought it was Aunt Octavia herself at first, then you thought I was the speaker, and now you are not fully persuaded that it is not my father. I will take you into my confidence this time—that I don't know how father got into the house last night. He wrote a note asking me to meet him on the roof and bring the folks. That was not unlike him, as he is the dearest father in the world, and his whims are just as jolly in their way as Aunt Octavia's."

I was sure that Aunt Octavia had retired for the night, so I changed my dress which carried the folks up through the trunk room. I had hardly reached there before my father appeared. The whole situation—my being there and all that—was distressed father.

"You think," she asked, "that those lights couldn't have winked out twice by themselves while you were on the stairway?"

"I am positive of it. And somebody—a being of some sort—passed me on the stairway. It might imaginably have been you."

"But I tell you positively it was not." "Then it might have been your father. A man who can enter a house at will might easily play any number of other tricks. His disappearance after I had gone down into the house with him was just as mysterious as the ghost."

"It was natural for father not to wait for you to know how he got in. The motive for that would be the fact that he is not supposed to see me or communicate with me in any way."

"It must have occurred to you that there is one member of the Hollister family we haven't mentioned in this connection."

"If you mean Hume?"

"None other."

"If Hume or my father should be caught in the house while I am there just now we should all pay dearly for it. Believe me, this is true. Some day you may know the whys and wherefores; at present no one may know. But why should Hume wish to prow around there at night—to assume for a moment that she is doing it?"

Her manner was wholly earnest. It was plain that she had entered into some sort of compact with her aunt, and no doubt the arrangement was in the characteristic whimsical vein of which I had enjoyed personal experience. I did not wish to press Cecilia for explanations she might not be free to make, but I ventured a suggestion or two.

"Hume may be entering the house and playing ghost for amusement, merely in a spirit of childish rebellion against the interdiction that forbids her the house. That is quite plausible. Hume being the spirited young person we know her to be. And it may amuse her, too, to play the chimney at a time when her sister is enjoying the visits of suitors. Without quite realizing that such was her animus, she may be the least—the very least bit jealous."

Cecilia flushed, and her eyes flashed indignantly. She bent toward me eagerly.

"Please do not say such a thing! You must not even think it!"

"She may be a little forlorn, alone in your father's house over the hills at times when you are surrounded by admirers, and it is my assumption from what I have learned in one way and another of your flight abroad last summer that some of these gentlemen now established at the Prescott Arms are known to her."

"Oh, all of them, certainly."

"And Hume's Whigles among the suitors?"

"That, Mr. Ames, is more unkind," she declared earnestly. "She has told me that she was not in the least interested in Mr. Whigles."

"And she told me the same thing, but I do not feel sure of it. But what if she is? You are not really interested in him yourself?"

She did not chafe any reply to my statement, but changed the subject abruptly. My description of the ghost had taken considerable time, and we were now at the end of our journey.

"I count on reaching my errand and taking the 2:07," she remarked.

"That's a short time to allow yourself. I've heard that it's a dreary business chasing the employment agencies."

"Not if you know where not to go. If you'll get me a machine of some sort I'll be off at once."

"I fear I shouldn't conclude my own business so soon, but if you will honor me at luncheon."

"Sorry, Mr. Ames, but it's out of the question. I hope to see you at dinner tonight. And please—"

"Yes, Miss Hollister."

"Please remember that you are Aunt Octavia's guest and don't annoy her by failing to appear at dinner. You know you haven't fixed that chimney yet."

Her smile left me well in the air. I stood staring after the very commonplace cab as it rolled away with her, my mind whirling chaos of emotion. The crowd jostled me impatiently, for other people, not breathing celestial ether from an hour of Cecilia Hollister's society, were bent upon the day's business.

Cause and Treatment of Curb.

Any time that puts too much stress on the incipient situated on the back part of the back joint, such as bending back heavy loads, going down hill or backing up too heavy loads of the hind legs slipping too far under the horse's body, may cause curb disease writes Dr. D. McIntosh in Orange, Ind.

Farmer. It is also caused by kicks or by the whittling striking against the back of the back joint.

There will be swelling and heat in the part and lameness.

In some cases there will be swelling, but no heat or lameness. If the swelling is hot and tender to the touch mix half an ounce acetate of lead and two ounces tincture of arnica.

Where curb comes with one quart of water. Shake up and apply a little to the swollen part three times a day and continue until the heat and swelling disappear. If there should be any swelling after the heat and lameness have disappeared mix one teaspoonful of biniodide of mercury with eight tablespoonfuls of bird. Rub on a little of this mixture with the fingers, let it remain on for twenty-four hours, then wash off with warm water and soap and repeat the blister in three weeks.

In cases where there is swelling, but no heat or lameness, the lotion would be of no use, but the above blister should be used as directed. In old or long standing cases of curb, if the animal is not lame, it is best to let it alone, as medicine would be of no service.

Fattening Cattle.

The Indiana experiment station has found that the best winter ration for fattening cattle consists of two and one-half pounds of cottonseed meal per 1,000 pounds of live weight and all the corn silage the animal will eat, with a small amount of dry roughage like clover or alfalfa hay or corn stover or straw added. Steers fed on this ration made the best gains with the highest finish and greatest economy of any combination.

Rheumatism as a result of kidney trouble, stiff and aching joints, backache and sore kidneys will all yield to the use of Foley's Kidney Pills. They are tonic in action, quick in results, curative always. W. S. Summary Laws.

The first summary laws that we know anything about were those of Lycurgus, the Spartan, about 800 B. C., unless the laws of Moses are taken into account. If the so-called "Mosaic code" was really the work of Moses, then they must be looked upon as being the oldest summary laws in existence. However, the Mosaic laws are no older than the laws of King Josiah, then the Spartan code of Lycurgus is the oldest. At any rate, the honor lies between Lycurgus and the author of the Mosaic code.—New York American.

MAKING A FARM GATE.

Here's One That Has Been Found to Work Very Satisfactorily.

We have two wagon gates through which we must pass very often—often a dozen or more times every day—says a correspondent of Home and Farm. The boys live on one hill and the old folks on the other, and between the two places is a cow pasture three-quarters of a mile long, part woodland and part cleared land.

To get down and up these gates at every such passing would be a great deal of trouble and in the run of it you would take time enough to do lots of other work. So it has been arranged to avoid this. Both gates are hung in open inward, so that a cow, horse or mule cannot push it open, and are hung so they will fall shut of their own accord. They are both light, one being made of three 1 by 4 bars, so they will not pound themselves to pieces. It is no trouble at all to pass through, even with a led horse, and there is great satisfaction in knowing that the gate will be sure to shut itself and require no further thought. But there is one difficulty which no doubt occurs to the reader's mind. Will not the wind blow it open and let stock into the country? Yes, it will. And that is the point of this letter.

One of the gates has a woodland to protect it from such an occurrence. Only a very severe wind from the east will affect it in the least. Only since a strip was cut through for a telephone line has such a thing occurred at all.

The other one, however, is easily affected by a wind from the west, a body of woodland of very dense growth deflecting even a north wind against it. But we have solved even that problem with what we call a wind latch.

A piece of high board 6 by 12 inches is trimmed to almost a feather at one end. A three-eighths inch hole is bored diagonally near the other end. A seven inch spike is put through and driven an inch into the post against which the gate strikes, near the top of the post, on the outside, so it hangs down clear of the barb wires of which the fence is made.

A piece of heavy wire three inches long is driven sideways and on the west side, near the top of this board or "wing," as we call it. A ring, or loop, is turned in the free end, from which a smaller wire extends down ward to near the middle of the gate, where it connects with the latch proper.

This is a small rod, the size of a six-penny nail, and it passes through a three-eighths inch hole bored down grain through a six inch board. The west end is bent square to the north and the wire from the wing is connected with it. The eastern end is bent directly downward. Now, when the wind blows hard enough to cause the gate to open it will raise the wing, and that will throw the eastern end of this rod so as to catch the gate.

Like nearly all our gates, this one is swung to a tree, with the upper hinge nine feet from the ground. The wind often causes this tree to sway back and forth, but this latch always catches the gate in spite of such.

TWO GOOD THINGS.

There should be a farmers' club in every neighborhood, and there should be the best of farm papers in every home. And herein as well as herein must be used by the one who would succeed.

THEATRICAL

Endorsed by Rev. Putnam.

This afternoon an invitation exhibition was given to the clergy and a few leading citizens of the motion pictures which are to be shown tonight and tomorrow night at the Lyric. This was done in order to give a chance for the ministers to pass on the fitness of the pictures for public exhibition. After seeing them they made the following statement:

"After having seen the films entitled 'The Truth About White Slavery' we take pleasure in stating that in our judgment there is nothing shown therein that is offensive to good taste or public morals. On the other hand we feel that these pictures contain a great moral lesson and express truths that should be brought to public attention."

MAKING THE DAIRY FARM PROFITABLE

The man who would make milk farming profitable will select the dairy herd for his machinery. It does not matter what breed he chooses, as this may be left to personal preference and to the conditions of his business, but there is one fact which must remain prominent in his mind, and that is that he must buy animals of the dairy type or he cannot succeed, says the Kansas Farmer. Having done this, he will test the animals to prove the individual capacity and weed out those which are unprofitable. The question of profit does not depend entirely upon production. If production alone were to govern breeding operations the selection of animals could be safely based upon performance pedigrees and records. This, however, would result in the sure destruction of the breed.

The man who goes into the dairy cattle business should have as his first object the reproduction of the animals of the breed which he has selected. The secondary consideration should be the production of milk. This point cannot be too strongly emphasized. Reproduction of the species is the vital importance.

The Ayrshire, wherever found, shows always the same strong breed characteristics of shapely udder, strong constitution and vigorous appetite. She is a fine dairy cow under all conditions and never fails to prove her worth in producing milk economically. The cow shown is Stockton—Primrose 114, grand champion Ayrshire cow at the Iowa dairy congress.

Important point in any breeding operation. Milk production, pork or beef or wool is secondary and incidental. If the dairy cattle breeder undertakes to build a herd on performance records and pedigrees alone he will soon have small, high strung, ill shaped, weak constitutioned animals who may individually produce largely at the pail, but whose progeny will have little or no value.

The great performance records which have been made by individual cows of all of the recognized dairy breeds are interesting scientifically and highly valuable in advertising the merit of these breeds, but if these records have been made at the expense of the vitality and robust constitution of the animals and especially of the calves they have no permanent value. The first object to be sought by the breeder who would improve the quality of his chosen breed and who proposes to remain in the business should be to breed for constitution, vitality and reproductive powers; second, for milk production, and this must always remain a secondary consideration if any real advance is made toward perfecting the breed.

GOOD TEMPER.

Good temper is a source of joy and is a great happiness both for those who possess it and for those who feel its influence. With gentleness in his character, comfort in his home and good temper in his wife the earthly felicity of man is complete.—Anon.

HOWLAND GETS THE CONTRACT

For Over 18,000 Square Yards of Paving in Hastings.

Will Begin Work in a Short Time—Work of the Highest Class.

Lee Howland, the contractor, was awarded the contract last week for 18,225 square yards of paving to be done this summer at Hastings. Mr. Howland's bid was $23,390.13 or about $1.30 a yard. Seventeen bids were received. Mr. Howland will begin the work in a short time.

The Courier can assure the people of Hastings that in awarding the contract to Mr. Howland they have made no mistake, as the paving which he has constructed in this city, as well as in neighboring cities, is of the highest class.

TAKE A VACATION

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Rachow Will Leave Next Week
For Southern Trip.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, held Tuesday, the board granted W. J. Rachow, cashier, a leave of absence for thirty days. Mr. Rachow has been very active and confined closely to his desk for several years and is very deserving of a vacation before the activities of the summer come to Charlevoix. Mr. and Mrs. Rachow expect to leave the first of the week for a trip to Cincinnati, Washington, Pinchurst, North Carolina, and Winter Park, Florida, and will visit Mr. and Mrs. A. I. Creamer and Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Foley, our estimable summer hotel men.

R. S. Jackson, who for several years was assistant-cashier at the State Bank and is now at Pontiac, is also out on his spring vacation and proposes to come to Charlevoix and visit his friends and will occupy Mr. Rachow's home and desk during his absence. The many friends of Mr. Jackson will be glad to know he will spend a few weeks in Charlevoix.

Business Change.

Walter Taylor has purchased the grocery business conducted by Art Alcock, corner State and Antrim streets, and is now in possession. Mr. Taylor is a well known Charlevoix boy and probably will receive his share of patronage.

TRY A SACK—IT'S FINE

Our stock of package Garden Seed is the largest we ever carried and they are from the very best reliable seed houses we know of. Our stock of Flower Seeds can't be beat.

Our car of "PROLIFIC" Seed Oats just arrived and they are dandies. Four years ago we sold two cars of Prolific Oats and our farmers were well pleased with the variety. They do well in this locality and our price is very low—55c per bushel. Please remember we are no kids in the Seed Business; we have been at it for the last 15 years and we know good seeds when we see them and we know how to buy them, therefore we can save you money on your seeds.

We respectfully ask you to call and examine our stock, not only Seeds, but Groceries, Boots and Shoes and remember our Feed. We have saved you money in the past and will as long as we are in business.

Yours respectfully,

CARE SHOULD BE EXERCISED

In the Selection of Proper Machinery For Spraying.

POWER MACHINE ESSENTIAL

Successful Combating of Pests Require Enough Machines For Thorough Work.

Care of Machines Very Important—Other Important Suggestions on the Subject From Fruit Belt.

Spraying is conceded to be one of the most important operations of orchard practice. The manner in which it is done very often determines the quality of the crop of fruit that is produced. The very best results in spraying are hard to attain with the use of poor machinery.

In those sections which are best adapted to the growing of fruit, and where the industry has assumed a stage of great commercial importance, the gasoline power sprayer is much more generally used than any other type of spraying machine. To say that this machine has revolutionized the spraying business, is literally true. Had the orchardists in our fruit sections to depend today on the old-fashioned barrel and tank pumps, manipulated by hand, the high degree of efficiency possible with a modern gasoline power outfit could not be attained.

Wherein does the gasoline power sprayer differ from the old type of hand pump so that its use results in greater efficiency?

In the first place and probably of more importance than anything else, it is capable of giving a pressure impossible with a hand machine. Anyone who has worked the handle of an old barrel pump knows that after hour knows that with its use a pressure of more than 100 pounds is almost out of the question. Our modern gasoline outfits with from two to four leads of hose, will easily maintain a pressure of from 100 to 200 pounds.

It is probably true that such a high pressure is not necessary in all cases, but it is true that by means of it more thorough and consequently, more effective work can be done in a much shorter time and with a much less effort.

Often the small orchard holder cannot afford to pay $400 for a good power machine when he can buy a barrel outfit for $20. The latter can be made to do the work well with a greater amount to time and labor expended.

There is a tendency in the fruit sections to try to get along with too few machines. There are certain times when spraying must be done immediately if good results are to follow. For example, the period when the first spray for codling moth must be applied to be effective is never much more than ten days, or from the time when the petals drop until the calyxes close. Often one machine will be expected to spray a hundred or more acres during that time. Can it be made to do it well? Let us see:

The average number of apple trees per acre is not less than sixty. Trees that are from 15 to 25 years of age will require at least from 10 to 20 gallons of spray per tree if thorough spraying is done. For one acre of trees, putting the average at 15 gallons per tree, it would take 100 gallons of spray, or four and one-half tanks of the ordinary (20) gallon size.

Unless water is very handy and other conveniences proportionately so, it is seldom that more than 9 tanks can be applied in a day with two leads of hose, and medium course nozzles. In other words, only two acres of such orchards can be well sprayed in one day with one power sprayer. Allowing the maximum time of ten days for the calyxes to remain open only 20 acres of orchard can be treated with one machine. Yet I know dozens of machines that are expected to spray two and three times as much in a season, and owners of orchards so sprayed condemn the arsenate of lead used; the methods of spraying advocated by those "scientific men," and possibly everything else, except the real reason for failure, a

Besides the provision for maintenance of a high pressure, there are other things that the power sprayer should possess in order that the highest degree of efficiency in spraying may result.

The agitation of the liquid in the tank is an important matter. In the case of most of our sprays, the individual particles that make up the insecticide are suspended in the water. Unless a sprayer is equipped with a good agitator these particles will settle to the bottom, thus rendering the mixture in the top of the tank weaker than it should be, and that in the bottom stronger, possibly in some cases too strong for safe application. Most of the power sprayers are equipped with suitable agitators, and none should be purchased unless it is known that it is efficient in this respect.

It is needless to say that the care of spraying machinery should never be neglected. The man who pays $400 for an outfit can not well afford to let it stand out over winter where metal parts will rust, where the tank will dry out and deteriorate as if it were a wooden one. Too often gasoline engines are ruined because water is left in the cooling pocket until cold weather comes on. It freezes there and the engine is useless until another cylinder is purchased.

Much of the trouble with a gasoline sprayer could be prevented if care were exercised in the fall to clean the outfit thoroughly to drain the engine, to care for the nozzles, leads of hose, etc. Then, in the spring, another careful overhauling ought to put it in such shape that there should be little trouble during the spraying season.

Not only should all this be done, but always after a time and snip or other caustic spray is used, the machine should be thoroughly cleaned by running water through it, including hose, rod and nozzles. The spray will not only injure different parts of the machine, but will also harden and small pieces will clog nozzles when again used.—The Fruit Belt.

MEET THURSDAY APRIL 17

Charlevoix County Pomona Grange With Peninsula Grange.

Good Program Has Been Arranged—Secretary Ball Will Give Address.

Charlevoix Pomona grange will meet with Peninsula grange Thursday, April 17. Charlevoix county has one of the biggest Pomona granges in the state and the meetings are always instructive. Lecturer Walter Black has prepared a good program and a large crowd will probably be present. Secretary Ball, of the county Y. M. C. A., will be the principal speaker.

The program follows:

NICHOLLS ELECTED MAYOR BY NEARLY THREE HUNDRED MAJORITY

Equal Suffrage Carries City by One—Hammond is Elected Road Commissioner—Seven New Men Chosen as Supervisors—Miller and Powers Win Out in Third Ward—Emmet Goes West—Other Election Notes.

Election passed off quietly in this city, a big vote being cast. The most interest was manifested in the suffrage amendment and the contest for the two year term for county road commissioner between Mr. Hammond, the regular nominee, and Mr. Wiles. A hot fight was also in progress in the third ward, where the Democrats succeeded in electing W. H. Miller supervisor and Alonzo Powers alderman to fill vacancy, the first time in the history of the city of Charlevoix that a candidate has been elected as a regular Democratic nominee.

Mr. Nicholls, the mayor-elect, is one of our most prominent business men and has previously given the city service several terms as president of the village and his enormous majority of this week is proof of the satisfaction which he gave in previous services. The new members of the council, Messrs. See, Carter, Shapton and Powers, are all prominent business men.

Another surprise was the big falling off in the vote for equal suffrage in the city which had been counted upon as a suffrage stronghold.

The results in the city follow on the city and county ticket:

In the county the regular tickets were successful, although candidates ran on slips in several precincts. William Wiles, the Norwood candidate for county road commissioner, running on slips, made a remarkable run in the townships bordering on this city. Mr. Hammond, the regular candidate, will win out with approximately 500 majority. Seven new faces will appear on the board of supervisors: House of Boyne Valley; Durand; of Charlevoix; Niles of Melrose;

Bricker, of Evangeline; Spring, of East Jordan and Moorehouse and Carter of Boyne City.

All the amendments probably carried in the county with the exception of equal suffrage, which ran close.

Sabin Hooper, the Union candidate, is elected mayor of Boyne City. The Socialists elected treasurer and carried two wards in that city. A. E. Cross is elected mayor of East Jordan.

In the state at large the Republican ticket is probably elected, although Murphy, Democratic, is pushing Moore hard for Justice. All the amendments carry with the exception of suffrage, which will be defeated by over 30,000. The wet and dry vote in twelve counties will probably result in an even break, each side claiming six counties.

Emmet county goes wet by over 200 and defeats the bonding proposition for good roads.

WILL VISIT CHARLEVOIX

Western Michigan Lake Shore Highway Association Will Early in July.

Prospects are that Charlevoix will receive a visit from representatives of the Western Michigan Lake Shore Highway association early in July.

The plan is to start from Grand Rapids July 7 and come by the lake shore route through Holland, Grand Haven, Muskegon, Ludington, Manistee, Frankfort, Traverse City, Elk Rapids, Charlevoix and Petoskey, thence to Mackinaw, the return would be by way of Petoskey, Central Lake, Bellaire, Traverse City, Cadillac, Reed City, Big Rapids, Howard City and Rockford to Grand Rapids. It is thought, twenty-five or more Grand Rapids automobiles will line up for the trip and others will be picked up along the way. Governor Ferris has been invited to join the party and will do so if his engagements will permit.

Men's Mass Meeting.

On Sunday afternoon at three o'clock Evangelist John W. Erskine will speak to men only at the Baptist church, no boys under sixteen will be admitted.

MAYOR REMOVED FROM OFFICE

Governor Ferris Takes Action on Charges Against Traverse City's Mayor.

That He Used His Office as a Means for Personal Gain.

Governor Ferris removed W. D. C. Germaine from office as mayor of Traverse City last Friday upon the grounds that he had used his office as a means for personal gain. The hearing in the matter was held Thursday afternoon, at which Germaine and his attorneys and a delegation of representative citizens of the resort city were present. His removal comes as the climax of a prolonged hearing which was held in Traverse City before Probate Judge Walker, at which a large number of witnesses were examined for the prosecution. There was a great volume of evidence submitted to the governor and this together with the recommendation of the court was the grounds upon which the action was taken. Germaine pulled all possible political wires at this point to save himself but the case was decided upon its merits, outside influences being placed beyond the pale of consideration. Germaine was serving his second term as chief executive of his home city and although he would have been put out of office automatically on May 1, when the new commission form of government goes into effect, the gravity of the charges was such that immediate action was considered necessary by the governor and his advisors.

After the hearing Thursday afternoon at which Germaine was represented by attorneys F. H. Pratt and J. J. Tweddle, and the prosecution by prosecuting attorney G. G. Covell of Grand Traverse county, Governor Ferris took the matter under advisement and Friday forenoon made his final decision in the matter.

STEAMER CITY OF BOYNE

The Work of Rebuilding is About Practically Completed

IS READY FOR INSPECTION

Will Take up Regular Schedule as Soon as Navigation Opens.

Improvements Made in All Parts of the Steamer—Search Light Added to Equipment—Other Improvements.

The work of rebuilding our favorite steamer City of Boyne, which was burned last September, which has been in progress this winter, under the supervision of Silas Swails is practically completed.

The boat has been entirely rebuilt and will hardly be recognized when she starts in commission. New decks and deck beams, stringers, stanchions and covering boards have been put in. A new cabin has been built flush with the main rails, with a 3 x 25 walk on each side. The new pilot house has a round front. Large windows, built on the interior plan, have been put in the cabin and the promenade and hurricane decks have been raised about four inches.

Improvements have also been made in the machinery, new eccentric valves having been put in the engine. The dynamo has been entirely rebuilt and rewound and a search light added. The entire cost of rebuilding will be in the neighborhood of $8,000.

The boat will be ready for inspection April 19 and will take up her regular schedule as soon as navigation opens, with the following officers:

Master, George W. Weaver; engineer, Wellington Bailey, Boyne City; fireman, Cleo LaPeer, Charlevoix; wheelman, Harry Roof, Boyne City.

For Flood Sufferers.

The following contributions have been received by the Charlevoix State Savings Bank for the benefit of the flood sufferers:

Christian Science Society, $60.00

Benefit concert, 28.05

Men's Bible Class, 10.00

Dr. C. A. Montagne, 2.00

$100.05

Will Add New Line.

Walter Taylor, the new proprietor of the corner grocery formerly conducted by Art Alcock, will put in a complete new stock. Mr. Taylor will also add a full line of baked goods.

SEED BEANS

Now is the Time to Contract.

We have on hand a good supply of little "Michigan Wonder" seed pea beans and we will furnish seed to you at a reasonable price and contract to pay you highest market price for your crop next fall.

Michigan is the greatest bean producing state in the union. She raises more than all the other states together. The bean business has been gradually forcing itself northward until now our county stands high in the average and the quality is of the very best. We don't mention these things to puff you up but because we believe them to be the truth. We think it is to your interest to go into the bean business as well as to our own. Mr. George Brown will be glad to see you any day, or if you will write us at Mt. Pleasant, Michigan, we will be only too glad to give you information you may desire. The bean business is our business and we think "we know beans."

We have rented the D. M. Ferry Seed house for another year and when the time comes for delivery we will be in a position to take care of you every day in the week and all during the season. Call us by telephone 73-2.

CHAPTER XIII.

At the Asolando Again.

I SET off at once for Pepperton's office, where I learned that the architect was out of town. But his chief clerk greeted me courteously. I told him frankly that I wanted to look at the plans of Hopefield Manor to enable me to learn the exact lines of the chimneys. He confessed surprise that they were causing trouble and expressed regret that they were not in the office.

"Miss Hollister sent for them this morning, and I have just given them to a young woman who bore a note from her."

I was taken aback to find that she had anticipated me in my rush for the plans of the house. Clearly I was dealing with a woman who was not only immensely amusing, but exceedingly shrewd as well. Could it be possible after all that she was herself playing ghost merely for her own entertainment? She was capable of it. But I had enlisted myself that she could not have performed the tricks of which I had been the victim the night previous unless she possessed some rare vanishing power like that of the East Indian mystics.

"Many I ask who came for the plans?"

"I judged the young woman to be a maid, or perhaps she was Miss Hollister's secretary."

I had given little heed during my short stay at Hopefield Manor to Miss Hollister's personal attendant. I had passed her in the halls once or twice, a young woman of twenty-five, I should say, fair haired and blue eyed. She might herself be the ghost now that I thought of it. But this seemed the most unlikely hypothesis possible.

At my own office my assistant pounced upon me wrathfully. He was half wild over the pressure of vexatious business and had just been engaging in a long distance conversation with a country gentleman at Lenox which had left him in bad temper. I was explaining to him the seriousness of my errands at Hopefield, rather unconvincingly, I fear, and the fact that I must return at once when the office boy entered my private room to say that three gentlemen wished to see me immediately. They had submitted

"Do I correctly understand, sir, that you mean to insult us?"

cards, but had refused to state the nature of their business. It was with a distinct sensation of surprise that I read the names respectively of Percival B. Shallenberger, Daniel P. Ormsby and John Stewart Dick.

"Show the gentlemen in," I said promptly, greatly to the disgust of my assistant, who retired to deal with several clients whom I had passed in the reception room merely walking the floor.

I had imagined all the suitors established in the Prescott Arms. As the three appeared clad in light automobile suits I could not forbear a smile at their grim appearances. Shallenberger, the novelist, and Ormsby, the kilt goods manufacturer, were big men. Dick, the Nebraska philosopher, was much shorter, though of compact and sturdy build. They greeted me in response to my greeting, and Ormsby closed the door behind them. Dick seemed to be the designated spokesman, and he advanced to the desk behind which I sat with a stride and manner that advertised his belligerent frame of mind.

"Mr. Ames," he began, "we have come here to speak for ourselves and certain other gentlemen who are staying for a time at the Prescott Arms."

"Gentlemen of the committee, welcome to our office," I replied, greatly amused by his ferocity.

My tone caused the others to draw in defensively behind him.

"We want you to understand that your conduct in accompanying a lady that I shall not name to the city is an act we cannot pass in silence. Your conduct in going to Hopefield Manor was in itself an affront to us, but your behavior this morning passes all bounds. We have come, sir, to demand an explanation!"

At a glance this was a situation I dare not take seriously.

"Mr. Dick and gentlemen of the committee, you are meddlesome persons!" I said.

"Meddlesome!" cried Dick heatedly and leaning toward me across my desk. "Do I correctly understand, sir, that you mean to insult us?"

"Nothing could be further from my purpose. But I cannot permit you to imagine that I'm going to allow you to heard me in my office and criticize my conduct in regard to Miss Cecilia Hollister or anybody else. As a philosopher from the fertile corn lands of Nebraska I salute you with admiration; as a critic of my ways and manners I show you the door."

"This I did not bit faintly, and I had a feeling that I was playing my part well. But the young man, before me seemed to swell with the rage that surged within him. He broke out furiously, heating the air with his list, then he controlled himself with painful effort.

"You insult me, but my personal grievances must wait," said Dick brokenly. "But, speaking for the committee, I wish to say that your intentions to the young lady whom you have dared, sir, to name are obnoxious to us."

"Nothing less than that!" added Shallenberger.

"We will not stand for it," growled Ormsby's heavy bass.

"Mr. Shallenberger," I replied evenly, "as a member of the great Hoosier school of novelists I have the most profound respect for your talents. My office boy is dead to the world for weeks after the appearance of a novel from your pen. But your interference in my private affairs is beyond all reason. And as for you, Mr. Ormsby, I dare say your knit goods are worthy of the fame of the pentap Utien from which you come. But to you and all of you I bid defiance. I return to Hopefield Manor by the 4:14 express."

I rose and bowed coldly in dismissal, but the trio stood their ground stubbornly.

"I tell you, sir, our organization is complete," declared Dick. "We signed a gentleman's agreement only last night for the express purpose of excluding you, and you cannot enter as a competitor. You are only an outsider, and we don't intend to have you interfering with our affairs."

"By the pink left ear of Venus," I blurted, "is it a trust?"

"You put it coarsely, Mr. Ames, but—"

"A suitors' trust? Then, if I read the newspapers correctly, your organization is against public policy and is contention of the anti-trust law. But may I inquire why, if you have perfected a combination of Miss Hollister's suitors, I found Lord Arrowood this morning sitting on a stool by the roadside, evidently in the greatest dejection. Can it be possible that an insurgent has crept into your organization and incurred the displeasure of the regulars?"

"We ruled him out," Shallenberger burst forth, "because he was a foreigner and not entitled to a place among freeborn Americans! That is one reason, and, for another, the colors of his half hose were an offense to me personally."

"And for another reason," interposed Ormsby, "he had no money with which to pay his board at the Prescott Arms. For this just cause the landlord ejected him shortly after breakfast this morning."

"Then there is already a rift in the lute!" I returned. "No trust of suitors is stronger than its weakest link. My hand is raised against your unrighteous compact, and I am in the debt to stay! Go back to the Prescott Arms, gentlemen, and assure your associates in this hideous compact of my most distinguished consideration and tell them to go to the devil."

I had gone to the St. Parvrenn hotel to call upon a Washington lady who had been making life a burden to my assistant and on our way out into Fifth avenue shortly after I bethought me of the Asolando tea room. My interview with the committee of the suitors had driven from my mind practically every consideration and every interest not centered in Hopefield Manor. My thoughts turned gratefully to the Asolando, where only a few days ago I had been precipitated into the strangest adventures my eventful life had known.

A strange face was visible in the cashier's desk as I entered the tea room. I passed on, finding the place quite full, but I took it as a good omen that the seventh table from the right was unoccupied, and I hastily appropriated it. A waitress appeared murmuring, "There are no birds in last year's nest," and recommended a Lockhart-Lampson sandwich, whose contents the girl told me were secret. As I drank my tea and ate the sandwich I surveyed the decorated menu card with interest and found pleasurable excitement in discovering an item directing attention to "Pickles a la Hezekiah, 15 cents." The delightful Hezekiah must, then, have impressed himself upon the denser mechanism of the Asolando on her first day there, thus to have won this recognition. And further on I noted, among the desserts, Peche Cedille with ever greater interest and satisfaction.

Cecilia occupied my mind now. The visit of the furious suitors to my office had stirred in me thoughts and aspirations that had never known harborage in my breast before. The presumption of those fellows had exceeded anything I had known in my contact with human kind, and instead of frightening me away from Hopefield Manor they had called my own attention to the strategic importance of my present position as a guest in Miss Cecilia's house.

As those thoughts ran through my mind I was dishing my Peche Cedille (I spurn all sweets ordinarily) when I became interested in the unusual conduct of a young woman who had entered the front door briskly and walked with a business-like air to the cashier's desk. The girl within the twinkling of an eye, opened the screen and without parry of any sort emptied the contents of her till into the waitress's reticule. With a nod and a smile and a moment's careless survey of the room, the girl departed, swinging the reticule in her hand. A long roll she carried under her arm contained my identification. It was Miss Octavia Hollister's Swedish maid, and the roll beyond peradventure contained the plans she had obtained at Pepperton's office.

The girl was well featured, neat of figure and becomingly gowned, and as I watched her leave the shop the lightness of her step, something smooth and flowing in her movements, interested me. I did not know what interest she had to be robbing the Asolando money drawer, but it was altogether possible that she was the Hopefield ghost!

On the whole, when I had finally torn myself away from my assistant, who made no attempt to conceal his doubts as to my sanity, and had settled myself in the 4:14 express with the afternoon papers I was fully satisfied with the day's adventures. I had bid the conchman in the morning not to trouble to meet me on my return and I engaged the village liverman to drive me to the house for hire.

"There's a heap of talk in the village," he observed. "They do say the old lady's cracked, if I may so speak, of her, and that there's ghosts in the house. And the conduct of the gentlemen at the Prescott is most remarkable. The word's passed that they're all dippy about the young Miss Hollister that lives with her aunt. I reckon all rich people are a bit cracked. It appears to go with the money. Mr. Bassford Hollister—he's the old lady's brother—he's just as bad as any of 'em. Yesterday he sat in the village street counting the number of people he saw chewin' gum."

"Told our doctor in the village he was figurin' the amount of horsepower the American people put into gum chewin' every year and expects to find some way of usin' it to run machinery. It's haruless, Doc says. He calls it just the Hollister philosophy, if that's the word. But I reckon it's idiotic anyway all right. I wish you good luck of your place, sir."

He evidently believed me to be some sort of upper servant, and this added to my joy of the day. With my good humor augmented by the interview I entered the house. A strange footman admitted me, and I went to my room at once without meeting any one else.

The man followed me with a penciled note, signed with Cecilia's initial, requesting my presence below as soon as possible, as she wished to see me before dinner. The thought that she wished to see me at any time filled me with elation, and her few lines scratched on a correspondence card were a pleasing addendum to our conversation of the morning. The bidding of my assistant's telegraphed resignation on my dressing table, to take effect in January, had not the slightest effect upon the lofty mountains within my fancy now found lodgment. I pleased me to believe that fighting blood still pulsed in the last of the house of Ames and that I had inherited defiance at the organized band of suitors that guarded the Hopefield gates and picketed the surrounding hills.

CHAPTER XIV.
The Riddle of the Sibyl's Leaves.

MY question as to which Cecilia I should find in the library was quickly answered. The frank smile, the candid of her eyes, confessed a new tie between us. We were becoming conspirators within the main conspiracy, whatever its character might be.

"As to Providence and the cook, what luck?" I asked.

"Oh, I managed that very easily. I ran into some friends who were going abroad for the winter. They have a staff of unusual servants and were anxious to keep them together until their return. I promptly engaged them all, and they are even now installed."

"Well, I have had an adventure of my own," I remarked, after expressing my relief that she had solved the servant difficulty with so much ease.

"Three gentlemen representing the suitors' trust now maintaining headquarters at the Prescott Arms, warned me solemnly to keep off the grass. In other words, I am not to interfere with their designs upon the heart of Miss Cecilia Hollister."

She flung open a fan, held it at arm's length and scrutinized the daffodils that were traced upon it.

"So they dared you?"

"So they dared me. And I took the dare."

"Why?"

Her eyes met mine gravely, but behind her pretty pout a smile lurked delightfully.

"If I should tell you now it would be stirring, which is a sin."

"I had imagined, Mr. Ames, that sort of thing came easy to you. But if it's sinful, of course—"

"But you do not rule me out! You give me a chance!"

My earnestness caused her manner to change suddenly. Her beautiful

LEARN TO SEW

School Girls in Rural Districts Are Being Taught to Use Needle.

Practical education for girls is not being confined entirely to those progressive cities and towns which have introduced domestic arts, but is gradually making its way into the rural districts. Enterprising country teachers are finding that sensible, sewing assignments are possible and furnish the "best kind of busy work" for girls. At least one county has been organized into sewing clubs for the girls, the experiment of corn clubs for the boys having proved so successful. It has been discovered that the girls have entered into their work as enthusiastically as the boys, and the scheme has been tried out so thoroughly that it can be considered an unqualified success, meeting favor with teachers, pupils and parents. Not only has it been found that this practical work is training girls in a subject which they will follow throughout their lives, but it has kept the interest of some who were about to leave school while the academic work of all the girls has improved instead of being hindered.

The girls do not spend their time merely sewing, but they are making useful things such as aprons and simple articles of wearing apparel. The art of making buttonholes, mending and darning hosiery also form a part of the course. Those who have had home training along these lines and prove their ability to do such work are encouraged to attempt more advanced things so the lessons are fitted to the individual. In some districts the teachers have not been able to instruct the students owing to their own lack of training. This difficulty has been overcome in a number of cases by having one or two of the older students who were capable instruct the others, or some of the women of the district have become assistants of the teacher. These assistants give their services and usually feel that they are more than repaid by the pleasure of helping the children and the school.

The only real objection to this work is the possibility of unwise teachers requiring the first and second grades to do fine sewing. The muscles of the hand are the last to develop and the cramping of fingers is injurious, so if the younger children sew they should be encouraged to use only long stitches. In a few districts where people are laboring under the delusion that schools are book education only, objections have been made to the sewing but when the results have been realized, there is inevitably a decided change in sentiment.

RELATIVES ARE SAFE

Interesting Reminders of Ohio Flood on Exhibition at L. E. Benton's Real Estate Office.

Mrs. L. E. Benton received a telegram Sunday from her relatives in Coshocton, Ohio, stating they were safe, although there was five feet of water on the office floor, located two blocks from the Muskingum river and their house was safe although there was 250 residences flooded in the city which has 22,000 population.

The residents of the city were marooned for seven days, during which time they received no communication from the outside world. Mr. Benton is exhibiting copies of the Warner Daily Tribune, which was issued during the flood, although the office was under water. The paper is a small sheet printed on a hand press.

BIG FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

Boosinger Block Totally Destroyed Wednesday Night of Last Week.

Loss Will Reach $30,000—Loss Fairly Well Covered by Insurance.

Wednesday night of last week East Jordan was visited by one of the most destructive fires in the history of that city when the Boosinger block was totally destroyed together with its contents.

The fire was discovered about eleven o'clock in the basement in front, where the furnace that heated the building was located, and there being but one window to this basement and that opening on a side street and the view of it further obstructed by a pile of wood and a pop corn vending booth, were the conditions which probably account for the fire having gained such headway before being discovered, and when it was finally seen the front basement, well filled with wood and store merchandise was a roaring furnace of fire.

There was something wrong with the blowing arrangement of the big fire whistle that caused a little further delay and the watchman at Mill A. was notified and he gave the first whistle alarm through some minutes later by getting on the roof when the big fire whistle was brought into use.

By the time the fire department got there, and in fact as soon as discovered, the fire was eating through the floor of the store building and as a gale of wind was blowing it was not safe to enter the building at all.

As soon as the fire department arrived three lines of hose were got busy, but owing to the fact that they could not reach the seat of the fire, and the plan and construction of the building, they had no chance to save either the building or stock.

The building, which was one of the first brick business houses in the town, was a two story and basement brick veneer, the north veneer being an 8-inch wall that had withstood the heat when the big Commercial House adjoining had burned a number of years ago. But the openings between the studding of the veneer walls made fire lines to carry the fire all through the building where the firemen could not reach it. The south wall fell out during the fire and next morning the north wall, so weakened as to be unsafe, was pulled over and then followed further disaster, as the falling debris "kicked" back and crushed in the wall of the Empey Block adjoining, which fell in onto the furniture with great damage.

The losses by the fire, while not definitely known, will probably approximate $30,000; the Boosinger building and entire stock a total loss; Empey Brothers heavy loss on building and stock destroyed and damaged by the falling walls and smoke, and the goods of M. E. Ashley & Company damaged by smoke. We understand that the property was fairly well insured through the amounts we have not learned.

Mr. Boosinger whose loss was total has been in business in East Jordan for almost 25 years, and has established such a trade and good reputation that it is believed as soon as the present disaster is straightened out will be found again in the business harness in East Jordan.

Is your property insured? If not, see Myrtle Young & Son.—Adv.

M. E. Duckles of Elk Rapids, who has been very successful the past year with an agriculture club among the boys, attending the Elk Rapids school, has received an appointment from the agricultural department at Washington as co-laborator of the boy's and girl's club work for Antrim county. He is to extend his efforts so that he will do for the whole county what in the past he has done for the Elk Rapids section.

The officers of the Leelanau county fair have hung up $100 in prizes for exhibits to be made by the school children of Leelanau county at the fair to be held in September. These prizes will be awarded for showing of flowers, vegetables, fruits, canned goods, baked goods, works of art, etc. There is also to be a prize will for the rural school represented by the largest percentage of its enrollment. This is a new feature on the part of the fair management and it is believed that the prizes will result in an increased interest in the fair.

"They know nothing of the silver book!"

"They know less than you do, and you have a good deal to learn, you know."

"I am dull enough, but I have no ambition but to read the riddle of the silver book. That and the laying of the ghost are my immediate business. As for the gentlemen at the Prescott, including my old friend Hartley Wiggins, I am not in the least afraid of them. My hand is raised against them. It's a case of the test of Ulysses over again. I'm as likely as any of them to bend the bow."

I thought this well spoken, but seemed amused, though without kindness, by the earnestness of my speech.

"If your wit is equal to your valor, you may go far. But"—and she turned her eyes full upon me—"we must play the game according to the rules."

"And as for Hartley Wiggins?"

She sat up very straight, and the sudden dislodge in her face startled me. I had forgotten my eavesdropping in the clump of raspberries on the day of my arrival. Certainly Wiggins had been decidedly in the face then, and my heart thumped in resentment as I recalled her own presence, or, at least, her encouragement, which I had borne to Wiggins at the Prescott Arms.

"I will tell you something, Mr. Ames. This afternoon, as I drove from the station I came round by the lake mostly to cool my eyes on the water, and I saw Mr. Wiggins and my sister seated on a wall in an old orchard. They were so busily engaged that they did not see me. At least, he did not, but I think Heczekiah did."

"Heczekiah," I answered, relieved in the nature of her disclosure, which could not but prejudice Wiggins' case. "Heczekiah is fond of orchards. I don't

"They dared me, and I took the dare," say this was the same one in which I had a charming talk with her myself. Doubtless she was amusing herself with Wiggins just as she did with me. She finds the genus homo entertaining."

"She is the dearest girl in the world—the sweetest, the loveliest, the brightest. Mr. Wiggins has treated her outrageously. He has taken advantage of her youth and susceptible nature."

"His punishment is sure," I answered complacently. "Heczekiah laughed when I mentioned his name. And you know today at the thought of him."

"Aunt Octavia is coming," she remarked, frowning at once a careless air, but I was content that she let my remark pass unchallenged.

Miss Octavia's entrances were always effective. She appeared tonight charmingly gowned, but the bright twinkle in her eyes made it clear that no matter of dress could affect her humor or spirit. She greeted me, as she always did, as though our acquaintance were a matter of years rather than of days. I even imagined that she seemed pleased to find me back again. She asked no questions as to my day's escapades, but as we went in to dinner she called forth cheerfully upon a description of her own activities.

"After I had baked my required quon of pies this morning I sought recreation at the traps. The stable boy who has been pulling the string for me having struck work, I most providentially happened that I espied Lord Arrowwood hanging on the edge of the maple tangle beyond the barn. I summoned him at once and put him to work managing the traps for me. Finding him most efficient, and after I had satisfied myself that two out of three was not an impossible record for one of my years, I brought him to the house and made tea for him. I had given him for a moment—I had taken him into the kitchen, where, during the absence of the regular cook I had to direct myself, and he found himself comfortable quite near the range. The pies on which I had been engaged all morning lay cooling near him. I had composed twenty-nine pies—I am an excellent mathematician and I could not have been mistaken in the count. What was my amazement to find after his lordship's departure that one pie was missing?"

"His lordship was doubtless hungry," I suggested. "Even nobility must eat. I passed Lord Arrowwood in the highway early this morning, sitting upon a stone, with sundry items of hand baggage reposing beside him. I have rarely seen any one so depressed. Now that the little matter of the servants has been adjusted, we must have a care lest the newly arrived phantoms, which Providence so kindly sent you today, be not stamped by any further manifestations of the troubled spirit of the unfortunate Briton who was hanged on the site of this house."

"Mr. Ames," replied Miss Octavia impressively, "that matter is entirely in your hands."

"But if I could see the plans of this house I should be better able to grapple with his ghostship."

I had thrown this out in the hope of eliciting some remark from her touching the Swedish maid's visit to Pepperlon's office, but Miss Octavia met my gaze unflinchingly.

"You are a clever man, Mr. Ames, and I have every confidence that you will not only solve the mystery of the library chimney, but find the ghost that switched off the lights on the stair last night. I prefer that you should accomplish these feats without my help from the plans. I myself have no suggestions. I am gratified that you are meeting the emergencies that have arisen here with so much determination, but it is what I should expect of the son of Arnold Ames of Hartford. Opportunity is all that any of us need to find ourselves truly great, and if in the ordinary course of our lives the gate does not open freely we are justified in picking the lock. When I determined to seek adventures in my old age, I resolved that I should miss no chance and that I should be prepared for any backdoor of the hand of fate. An odd fancy struck me at the beginning of my new life that Boston would someday be the starting point of some interesting experience. This has not yet developed, but in order that I may be prepared for anything that may come, I keep a blue silk umbrella constantly checked at the Parker House. The presence of the little black check in my purse is a constant reminder that Boston may one day call me."

A discussion of the Parker House umbrella followed, Cecilia and I joking, and it proved so fruitful a topic that it carried us to our coffee.

Three suitors were announced a little later, and I slipped away without excuses, while Miss Octavia and Cecilia adjourned to the library.

The ghost, I had sworn, should I battle me another night.

As I crossed the second floor hall I passed the Swedish maid walking toward Miss Octavia's room. I was somewhat annoyed to find on looking over my shoulder to make sure of her destination that she, too, had paused her hand on Miss Octavia's door, and was watching me with interest. She vanished immediately, but to throw her off the track I went to my own room, closed the door noisily and then came out quickly and ran up to the third floor.

Bassford Hollister's mysterious exit had lingered in my mind as the curious incident of the dreadful Friday night. Having been baffled in my effort to get hold of the architect's plans, my thought now was to await in the upper part of the house a repetition of the various phenomena that had so puzzled me. By the process of exclusion I had eliminated nearly every plausible theory, but if the ghost manifested himself with any sort of periodicity (and the hour of the chimney's queer behavior had been mine) I was now prepared to meet him in the regions he had chosen for his exploits.

I had a pretty accurate knowledge of this time of the position and function of all the electric switches between the lower hall and the fourth floor, but I tested them as I ascended, glancing down now and then to make sure I was not observed. From the sound of voices in the library I judged that most of Cecilia's suitors must now have arrived, and so much the better. I argued, for, with Miss Octavia and her niece fully occupied, I could the better carry on my ghost hunt above stairs.

At a quarter before 9 I switched off the lights on the third and fourth floors and established myself at the head of the stairway and quite near the trunk room door. This door I had opened, as I feared that if Bassford Hollister were at the bottom of the business he would probably wish to find his way to the roof again. So far as I was able to manage it the stage was in readiness for the entrance of the goblin.

The clock below struck 9, and at most upon the last stroke I heard a sound that set my nerves tingling. I crouched in the dark, waiting. Some one was coming toward me, but from where? The bottom of a well at night light was not blinder than the fourth floor, but the switch lay ready to my hand and my pockets were stuffed with matches of the sort that light any where. The stairways were all carpeted, as I have said, and yet some one was ascending bare foot, lightly and with delays that suggested a furtive purpose. Meanwhile, as a background for this unsightly, murmurs of talk and occasional laughter rose from the library. This concealed stairway, wherever it was, could not be of interminable length, and I had counted, I think, fifteen steps of that strange ascent when it ceased. I heard a rumbling as of some one seeking a latch, and suddenly a light current of air swept by me, but its clean fresh quality was not in itself disturbing. I stamped and struck a match snarling on the carpet and at the same time clicked the switch. I should say that not more than ten seconds passed from the moment the soft rush of air had first advertised the opening of a passage near me until the hall was flooded with the glow of the electric lamps overhead. My mind had also performed its office, but, flung the electric current behaving itself normally, I blew it out. What I saw now interested me immensely.

In the solid wall near the stair and almost directly opposite the trunk room a narrow door had swung outward; a neat contrivance, so light in its construction that it still swayed on its concealed hinges from the touch of the hand that had released it. How it had opened or what had become of the provider who had unlatched it remained to be discovered. It seemed impossible that whoever or whatever had climbed the hidden stairway had descended, nor had I been conscious of a ghostly passing as on the previous night. I had only my senses to apply to this problem, and their efficiency was unimpaired for a moment by fear.

The opening in the wall engaged my attention at once, and I was startled by the thought that here was a practical minor susceptible of investigation. I stepped within the door and lighted a candle, and just as the flick caught fire I went a switch somewhere and out went the half lamps. But, having so to speak, put my foot to the mystic riddle, I would not turn back, and I continued on down the steps.

Great was my astonishment to find that I had apparently stepped from a new into an old house. The stair treads were worn by long use, the plaster walls that enclosed them were cracked and crumbled, and I seemed to have plunged from the glory of Hopefield into some dim old passage of a domicile of another era that lay within or beneath the walls of the Manor. As I slowly descended, holding high my candle, I recalled, not without a quail, the story of the British soldier when tradition or superstition linked to the site of Miss Hollister's property.

"At the foot of the stair I found two rooms, one on either side of a small hall, and these also were clearly part of an old house that seemed to be somehow merged into the Hollister mansion. I remembered now that the masonry stood wedged against a rough sort of rock and that the front and rear entrances were upon different levels, and it was conceivable that the back part of the mansion might include these rooms of an earlier house occupying the same site. Why they should have been retained was beyond me.

Through the carefully preserved windows, many pained and quaint, of these hidden rooms the lading walls of the new house were blank and black.

One door only remained in this shroud of the old house, and I hastened to it. It opened, still lighting my way with a candle. Before me lay the coal cellar at which I had barely glanced on the morning after my installation at Hopefield. I now began to get my bearings. I remembered two iron ladders in the cemented surface of an area on the east side of the house where fuel was deposited, and mounting a few steps that were of recent construction and had evidently been built to afford communication between the summit of the old house and the subterranean portion of the new, I found to my relief and satisfaction beneath one of these openings a short ladder, through which the descent might be reached. Here, then, the manner of ghostly ingress was illustrated by perfectly plausible means. The lid of the coal hole was entirely withdrawn, and a bar of moonlight lay gleaming upon a pile of anthracite at the foot of the ladder.

H. V. RIFENBURG DEAD

Was One of the Pioneer Residents of Charlevoix County.

H. V. Rifenburg, one of the pioneer residents of this county, died at his home in fronton Monday morning.

Mr. Rifenburg was born in the east over 82 years ago and came to this state settling in Muskegon. About twenty-five years ago he came to this city and built the Argo Mills, which he conducted until about ten years ago, when he retired to his farm at Ironou, where he has since resided.

This fall he went south, returning last Friday when he was taken with a chill which resulted fatally. He leaves his wife and three children: Cassius of Petoskey and Doran and Joy of Ironou.

The funeral was held from the residence this forenoon.

Comfort Your Stomach

We pay for this treatment 19¢. It fails to promptly relieve indigestion and dyspepsia.

Reall Dyspepsia Tablets remedy stomach trouble because they contain the proper proportion of Pepsin and Bismuth and the necessary curative elements that help nature to supply the elements the absence of which in the gastric juices causes indigestion and dyspepsia. They act on the stomach to digest food and to quickly convert it into rich red blood and material necessary for overcoming natural body waste.

Carry a package of Reall Dyspepsia Tablets in your vest pocket, or keep them in your room. Take one after each heavy meal and prove our assertion that they will keep indigestion from bothering you.

We know what Reall Dyspepsia Tablets are and what they will do. We guarantee them to relieve indigestion and dyspepsia, or to refund your money, if they fail to do so. Doesn't it stand to reason that we wouldn't assume this money risk were we not certain Reall Dyspepsia Tablets will satisfy you? Three sizes: 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. There is more culture in this section of the country than all other places put together, and in the last few years was supposed to be remarkable. For several years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies and to constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Since then has proven culture to be a contagious disease, and therefore, genuine constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Keeps Your Stove "Always Ready for Company"

A bright, clean, glossy stove is the joy and pride of every housekeeper. But it is hard to keep a stove nice and shiny—unless Black Silk Stove Polish is used. Here is the reason: Black Silk Stove Polish sticks right to the iron. It doesn't rub off or dust off. Its shine lasts four times longer than the shine of any other polish. You only need to polish one-fourth as often, yet your stove will be cleaner, brighter and better looking than it has been since you first bought it. Use on your parlor stove, kitchen stove or gas stove. Get a can from your hardware or stove dealer. If you do not find it in the store, your dealer is authorized to return your money. But we feel sure you will agree with the thousands of other housewives who are now using Black Silk Stove Polish and who say it is the "best stove polish ever made."

LIQUID OR PASTE ONE QUALITY

Be sure to get the genuine. Black Silk Stove Polish costs you no more than the ordinary kind. Keep your registers, radiators and stove pipes bright and free from rusting by using BLACK SILK AIR-DRYING ENAMEL. Brush free with each can of enamel only. Use BLACK SILK METAL POLISH for silverware, metal, hardware or brass. It works quickly, easily, and leaves a brilliant surface. It has no equal for use on automobiles.

Comparative Digestibility of Food

Made with different Baking Powders

From a Series of Elaborate Chemical Tests:

An equal quantity of bread (biscuit) was made with each of three different kinds of baking powder—cream of tartar, phosphate, and alum—and submitted separately to the action of the digestive fluid, each for the same length of time.

The relative percentage of the food digested is shown as follows:

Bread made with
Royal Cream of Tartar Powder:

100 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with phosphate powder:

68 1/2 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with alum powder:

67 1/2 Per Cent. Digested

These tests, which are absolutely reliable and unprejudiced, make plain a fact of great importance to everyone: Food raised with Royal, a cream of tartar Baking Powder, is shown to be entirely digestible, while the alum and phosphate powders are found to largely retard the digestion of the food made from them.

Undigested food is not only wasted food, but it is the source of very many bodily ailments.

THE DOMINANT AIR.

As through an open runs the rhythm of one dominant air, so through men's lives there rings a dominant note, soft in youth, strong in manhood and soft again in old age. But it is always there, and, whether soft in the gentler periods or strong amid the noise of the perihelion, it dominates always and gives its tone to the whole life.

Eggs For Hatching.

THE HORSEMAN.

Sometimes horses are affected with indigestion and dizziness, the result of standing idle in the stable. The remedy is to turn the affected animal out to exercise and substitute whole oats and bran for corn.

It is expensive carelessness to hitch a warm horse inadequately protected from raw winds or a drizzling rain. Blanket him when you hitch.

The stallion that is worked regularly every day will get the most and best colts.

Any man who will strike a horse in the head should never be allowed to touch one again.

If possible plan for dry box stalls with dirt floors in which to winter the colts. If this is impossible keep the stalls well bedded and clean to prevent accidents from slipping.

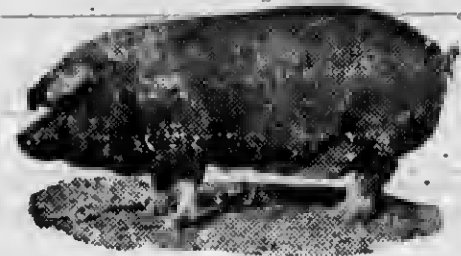

Pick out a sire with a good disposition. Never take a colt from a naturally vicious tempered mare. Peculiarities of disposition are almost invariably transmitted.

WINTERING SMALL PIGS.

Careful Management Required to Make Them Return a Profit.

Many small farmers buy fall pigs and fail to make them do well, but do not know the reason, writes J. Brown in Orange Judd Farmer. Fall pigs will not winter well and make a good profit unless several restrictions are carefully submitted to. First make arrangements to let them have access to out of doors whenever they are disposed to go out. Pigs shut up indoors languish. They want to run out when the weather is severe, even if they return at once some days. Swine carry so much of a coating of fat that they will stand more cold than many suppose. Frequently the kind hearted owner closes the doors and expects pigs to go on growing. But they refuse. The larger the pigs when severe weather comes on the better they will do. Of course if you live where the climate is mild this does not apply. But all young animals must have plenty of exercise.

Second, do not let them work or lie in heating manure. The warmth appeals to them. They spend too much time in it and then rush into the cold.

The Poland China hog is considered the ideal of the hard type. The individuals are broad backed, low, and dress a bush per cent of marketable meat. Prior to 1870 the Poland-Chinas averaged larger than now and were inclined to coarseness. Since then they have been improved and in recent years have been growing in popularity. They are solid black in color with white points.

only to be attacked by lung and other kindred troubles. The roting over of manure in summer will not hurt. Give plenty of bedding and a sleeping room where drafts cannot blow over them, and let it be dry. Dampness is detrimental to swine any time, but especially so in winter.

Third.—Milk is likely to be scarce in winter, and for this reason many persons are not situated right to take on young pigs. They need milk because they are young and all the more because the weather is trying to digestion. Persons with young swine that do not grow forget some of these things. A hot slop (not too hot) winter mornings is relished by all hogs and seems useful where the pigs are making their first growth.

Fourth.—Constipation, that enemy of all animals, is more than likely to attack pigs that are deprived of green food and under stress because of any lack of nutrition. It must be guarded against. Give fruit, vegetables, sods, branches of apple trees, bran, wild dillings, molasses and small doses of wood ashes.

Hog Cholera Serum.

Last May R. L. Miller of Mayetta, Kan., bought 430 head of two pound shots at Kansas City yards at a time when his hogs at home were suffering from so called hog cholera. As the regulations for interstate shipment require, these shots were dipped and vaccinated. When brought home they were turned in with the sick herd which was then vaccinated also. A few of the sick hogs died, but not one of the shots, and of course Mr. Miller is a firm believer in the serum treatment.—Kansas Farmer.

Saving at the Spigot.

Sixty-one per cent of the stallions in use in the middle west are grades and many of them are scrubs. These animals are only kept in business by the low service fees. Saving $5 or $10 on the service fee and losing $75 or $100 on the colt is making money backward.

Slop For Hogs.

One of the things necessary to consider as important is to be sure that the hogs must be made to drink plenty of water in winter, and in order to do this, a part of their feed should be given as slop.

LUCK AND LABOR.

Luck is ever waiting for something to turn up; Labor, with keen eyes and strong will, will turn up something. Luck lies in bed and wishes the postman would bring him the news of a legacy; Labor turns out at 6 o'clock and with busy pen and ringing hammer lays the foundation of competence. Luck whines, Labor whistles. Luck relies on chance, Labor on character.—Richard Codden

CHARLEVOIX COURIER

The Leading Newspaper in the Best Little City Anywhere

VOL. 31. NUMBER 16

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 1913

PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

PROVISIONS OF INCOME TAX

Which is Incorporated in the New Democratic Tariff Bill.

BEFORE THE NEW CONGRESS

All Residents With Income Above $4,000 Liable to Tax.

Rate Increases With Income—How Computed and What is Exempt—Estimated Revenue Will be $100,000,000.

Included in the Democratic tariff revision bill introduced before the new congress at Washington and now being considered is an income tax section which would require every resident of the United States who earns more than $4,000 a year to pay a tax of 1 per cent on his earnings in excess of the exemption. This would not require the man who earns only $4,000 to pay a tax, but it would demand that the individual who earns $4,000, for example to pay into the government treasury an annual tax of 1 per cent on $400, or $4.

The bill also would provide higher rates of taxation for persons with larger incomes, adding a surtax of 2 per cent additional on earnings in excess of $20,000, 2 per cent additional on earnings in excess of $30,000 and 3 per cent additional on earnings in excess of $100,000.

Under the surtax provisions the man who earns only $20,000 would pay to the government each year at the rate of 1 per cent on $16,000 ($4,000 exempt), or $160. If he earns $30,000 he would pay 1 per cent on $16,000 and 2 per cent on $10,000, thus making his annual tax $360. The person with a $50,000 income would pay 1 per cent on $16,000 and 2 per cent on $30,000, a total tax of $700. The man with an income of $100,000 would be required to pay 1 per cent on $16,000, 2 per cent on $30,000 and 3 per cent on $50,000, which would be $1,500, bringing his total income tax to $2,500.

The individual with a net income of a million would pay this $2,500 on his first $100,000, and in addition, he would pay 4 per cent on $900,000, which would bring his income tax to $35,000.

The bill would also reenact the present corporation tax law imposing a 1 per cent tax on the earnings of corporations, stock companies, insurance companies and the like, but it would exempt partnerships. This is a flat tax, there being no graduated scale as the earnings increase. The few changes from the present corporation tax act concern chiefly the time of making returns and the time for collection. The bill also includes under its provisions the property and earnings of this country of persons who live abroad.

It is estimated by members of the ways and means committee that approximately $100,000,000 in revenue may be derived from this new tax, including the corporation tax, that amount making up for the deficit revenues to be derived from imports by virtue of the greatly reduced tariff rates and the transfer to the free list of articles that are classed as necessities of living.

Incomes of taxable persons shall include gains, profits and income derived from salaries, wages or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, businesses, trade, commerce or sales or dealings in property, also from interest, dividends, securities, including income from property, income from but not the value of property acquired by bequest, devise or descent, and also proceeds of life insurance policies paid upon death of persons insured.

The bill allows as deductions in computing net income all necessary expenses actually incurred in carrying on any business, not including personal, living or family expenses, interest accrued and payable within the year by a taxable person on indebtedness; all national, state, county, school and municipal taxes, not including local benefit taxes; losses incurred in trade or from fires, storms or shipwreck not compensated by insurance or otherwise; debts actually ascertained

as worthless and charged off; also reasonable allowance for wear and tear on property, but no deduction will be allowed for expense of restoration or improvements made to increase property value. It excepts also in computing net income amounts received as dividends upon the stock of any corporation, joint stock company, association or insurance company which is taxable on its net income under the corporation tax provision of the bill.

The bill includes the compensation of the president of the United States during his term, judges of the supreme and inferior courts of the United States and compensation of all officers and employees of a state or any subdivision thereof. It establishes a system of collection of the tax at its source, requiring all persons, firms, co-partnerships, companies, corporations, joint stock companies, associations or insurance companies, and all trustees, executors, administrators, receivers, etc., all officers and employees of the United States having the control or disposal of salaries, wages, interest and other profits and income of another person, to withhold (Continued on page 6.)

Will Take Trip.

The legislature has passed a bill making an appropriation of $20,000 for the purpose of paying transportation expenses of veterans of the civil war, now living in Michigan who participated in the battle of Gettysburg, to the celebration of the historic struggle to be held on the battlefield on July 1-4—the 50th anniversary of the fiercest battle of the rebellion. The state of Pennsylvania will supply the veterans with rail fares and the war department of the general government will supply tents.

WILL GIVE GOLD MEDAL

To the School Boy or Girl Writing Best Essay on Earth Roads.

United States Good Roads Department Will Make the Award.

A gold medal to the school boy or girl between the ages of 10 and 15 who writes the best composition, not to exceed 300 words, on the repair and maintenance of earth roads, is to be awarded by Logan Walter Page, Director, Office of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

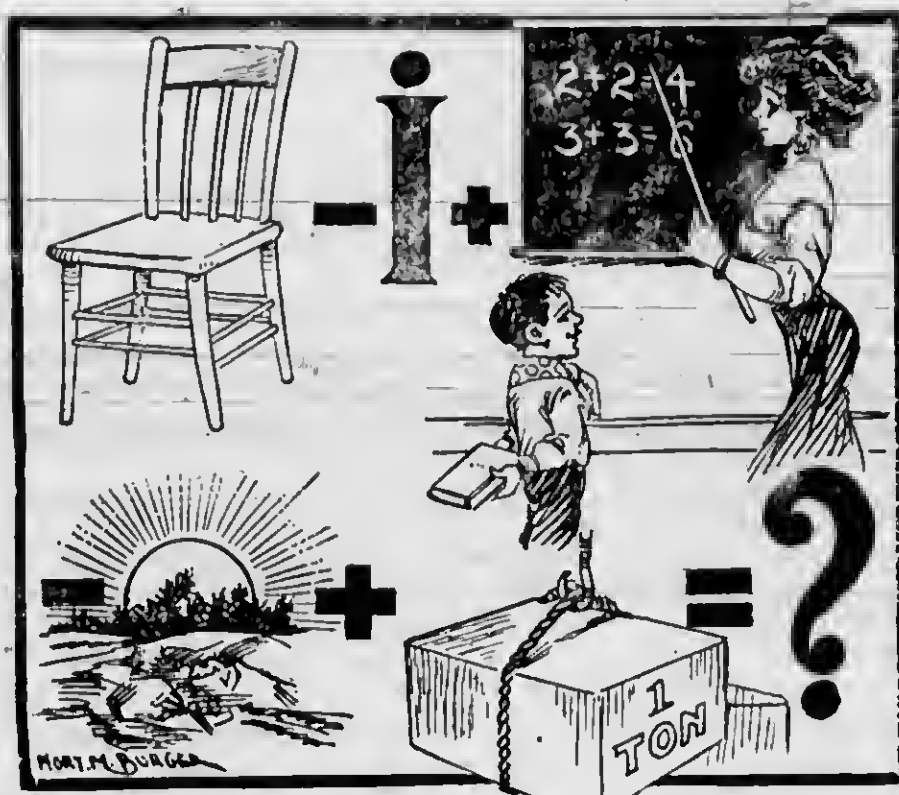

All compositions must be submitted to Mr. Page before May 15, 1913, and the medal will be awarded as soon thereafter as the compositions can be graded. The composition may be based on knowledge gained from book or other sources, but no quotations should be made.

After many years experience in dealing with the public road situation of the country, it is Mr. Page's belief that ignorance on the subject of repair and maintenance of roads is as much the cause of their bad condition as any other one factor. It is expected that the competition will bring about a better understanding of the subject of repair and maintenance in the rural districts.

Many children living in the rural districts have experienced the disadvantages of roads made impassable through a lack of proper maintenance and it is expected that their interest in the competition will stimulate greater interest among the parents.

Bad roads have prevented many children from obtaining a proper education and have even prevented doctors from reaching the side of rural patients in time to save their lives.

Any child between the ages mentioned, attending a country school may compete. Only one side of the paper must be written on; each page should be numbered; the name, age and address of the writer, and the name and location of the school which he or she is attending must be plainly written at the top of the first page. The announcement of the competition has been sent to the superintendents of schools in rural districts. No further information can be obtained from the office of public roads. This announcement should be placed to everyone, and all children will thus start on a basis of equality.

COAD WILL ADDRESS CLASS

Next Sunday on Subject of Layman's International Missionary Union.

One of the Phases of the Men and Religion Forward Movement.

Judge Mayne at the session last Sunday of the Men's Bible class presented to the class the weaknesses and dangers, as he saw them, in the commission form of government. The address was listened to with the closest attention. At the close, it was decided to appoint a committee to canvass the matter of a public meeting of the electors to discuss the matter of charter revision and draw out an expression of what change, if any, the electorate of the city deem advisable.

Next Sunday James E. Coad, President of Needham Business College of Traverse City, will address the men on the subject of the Layman's International union. A convention of the Northern counties of Michigan in this behalf is to be held at Traverse City the latter part of the month and Mr. Coad is to present the subject particularly with reference to interesting the men of Charlevoix in the movement and to sending delegates to this convention.

This is one of the phases of the men and religion movement that is so widespread at the present time and is worthy of the attention of all men in any way interested in this great movement.

Mr. Nettleton was to have addressed the class on his experiences in Mexico, but has kindly consented to take a later date.

BRANDOW-GOSS

Charlevoix Young People United in Marriage Wednesday of Last Week.

The elegant home of Mrs. J. H. Connor on Mason street was the scene of a quiet wedding last Wednesday April 9, the contracting parties being her eldest daughter, Miss Vera Goss and Frank Brandow.

At high noon the bridal party entered the parlor to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, rendered by Mrs. Ethel Gordon. The bride was gown in white Persian lawn, trimmed with shadow lace and carried roses, the groom wore black. Rev. Quinton Walker read the ring service.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Marcia. Guy Withers was best man. The house was very tastefully decorated, the color scheme being pink and white. A four course lunch was served, after which the happy couple left for the north on a short wedding trip.

The young people received many beautiful presents, signifying the high esteem and good will of their many friends.

LETTER FROM FLOOD DISTRICT

Received by Mrs. J. H. Blackwood From Mrs. Libbie Gilpatrick.

Graphic Description of Experience of Her Daughter During Flood Period.

This letter was written by Mrs. Gilpatrick, a sister of Mrs. J. H. Blackwood, and the lady who passed through the flood was her only daughter, Miss Alice Ray Gilpatrick, who has taught in Dayton for three years. Her father was Prof. Gilpatrick of Denison University at Grandville, Ohio.

Grandville, Ohio, April 2, '13. Dear Brother Joe:

Ray was in the flood district but unhurt.

She was confined for three days with nine others to the second floor of the house.

She went over to the school building, about two blocks away, but saw suspicious looking signs of rising water and hurried back and warned the rest.

They all went to work collecting food, and moved everything movable from basement and first floor to second.

They had a little over one hour to do this when the water cut them off. It raised 10 or 12 feet. They had enough to eat, but cold food; no fire to keep warm by or to cook anything.

There is a little fireplace in her room, and they found some boards in the garret with which they made a little fire in this grate for a sick woman in the house, one who was threatened with pneumonia. She could not let us know anything.

Telephones, telegraphs, electric lights, water works, gas and railroad, all cut off from 50,000 to 100,000 people. Every business wrecked; can't buy food, no matter how much money one has.

The water began to go down Thursday P. M.

The flood came Tuesday morning, Friday morning she could get out of the house and picked her way to a place where a train was then made up. She managed to get to Columbus by train, then around to Grandville by automobile 16 miles, then on the B. & O. to Newark and to Grandville by electric car. It took her 12 hours while 12 ordinarily and got home Friday night at 8:30.

The next morning she started back loaded up with bread, butter, a peck basket of eggs, milk, grape juice, medicine, a sanitary still to distill the water, groceries, fruit, a shovel, axe, coal-oil stove, cooked food, and I don't know what else. She took a big strong colored man to help and got out at 8:30 in the morning, so you may know there was something doing here. One of the neighbors came to help. This was the last we heard of her until last night. She said that over night another bridge had gone down and it took her 25 hours to get back. Her company had swelled to five persons. She had good success in getting all these packages, transferred at the different stops and when she got back to the house at last, they were pretty glad to see her.

While there she looked up a lot of people she knew. Found most awful conditions—too horrible to take in. When she thought she had done all she could she came home again. Got here last night at 8:30.

The colored man is still there helping to shovel the mud out of houses, and there are miles of houses and stores, factories, besides hotels, business blocks, etc., to be cleaned out before they can be livable, besides the score of small homes swept away.

Everybody has to be bed by things sent in. Our church collected and packed on Monday thirty boxes and barrels and sent them the same afternoon to Columbus by auto truck and one of the teachers went all the way with them to see that they got there. Thieves here added to the horror and now they have martial law. Every street and bridge is guarded by soldiers and they won't allow strangers to come in without a passport from the Governor. The steel high school building was badly damaged and Ray has no idea when she will have to go back.

The second day after they were shut in a horse swam over the back fence onto the back veranda. Ray got a man to wade out and bring it into the kitchen. Then they got it out on another veranda which was out of the water, and it was shivering so Ray got her blanket and put on it; then she managed to doctor up its wounds. It had been swimming for 21 hours and then it stood on that veranda two nights and one day, so it was made of strong stuff. They had no feed, but an ear of corn floated to them. At last some officers came and took it down after the flood subsided and they were glad to get a horse.

Few lived through. Dead ones are scattered all over as well as other animals and people.

Now I must get this off. With love, your sister, Libbie B. Gilpatrick.

NEXT LECTURE COURSE

Kellogg-Haines Singing Party Attraction for Next Monday Night.

Monday evening, April 21, is the date of the next number of the lecture course—The Kellogg-Haines Singing Party.

There are five members in the Kellogg-Haines Singing Party, including a pianist.

While the members of this company are all good soloists their claim to recognition is chiefly in their quartet work. The claim has been made that while male quartets by long practice often reach a very high standard of ensemble perfection, that it is doubtful if any other mixed quartet in America can approach the Kellogg-Haines Singing Party in that sinking of individuality and perfect blending of voices which comprises ideal quartet work. In addition to the mixed quartet, three members of the company comprise a male trio of equal merit. Seat sale will open Friday at the usual place.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Of Congregational Church Will Meet Friday Afternoon With Mrs. Widdifield.

The Woman's Missionary society of the Congregational church will meet with Mrs. H. W. Widdifield Friday afternoon, April 18, at 2:30 o'clock.

The usual program will be omitted and Mrs. W. H. Miller will give her report of the home and foreign missionary convention of her state, which she attended in Grand Rapids, March 23 and 24.

Response to roll call with Scripture or favorite quotations. Cordial invitation extended to all who wish to attend.

Teachers' Examination.

The regular examination for April will be held in the high school building in the city of Charlevoix on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 24, 25 and 26, beginning at 8:30 standard time.

Questions in reading will be based on Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Certificates for all grades will be issued from this examination. Paper will be furnished for applicants.

Applicants who expect to have last night. She said that over night another bridge had gone down and it took her 25 hours to get back. Her company had swelled to five persons. She had good success in getting all these packages, transferred at the different stops and when she got back to the house at last, they

NEW PRIMARY LAW PASSED

Is Now up to Governor Ferris Awaiting His Signature.

SEVERAL CHANGES ARE MADE

Repeals Party Enrollment and 15 Per Cent Clause of Present Law.

Primary Day to be General Registration Day—Names of Candidates of Political Parties to Appear on One Ballot.

The primary bill, for a general revision of the general primary act, and to correct features of it, about which there has been so much complaint has now only to be signed by the governor to make it a law, having passed both the house and senate.

Here are the essential features of the bill as passed:

The section of the existing act which provides that a political party must have enrolled 15 per cent of its strength, as shown at the last preceding election, else it cannot have its candidates' names printed on the primary ballot, was repealed.

The section requiring that electors must enroll and designate their political party, when enrolling, was repealed.

In place of the party enrollment, the requirement hereafter shall be one of two methods. The elector may, although it is not obligatory, mark a cross in the circle at the top of his party ballot, and then mark a cross opposite the name of each candidate he desires to vote for on his party ticket. If, having marked a cross in the circle at the top of the ballot, he then marks a cross opposite the name of a candidate on another party ticket, with the idea of splitting his ticket, his vote shall be counted only for the candidates on his own party. If he seeks to split his ticket without marking a cross in the circle at the top, his ticket becomes void as to all candidates.

In a word, every elector voting at a primary, must vote a straight primary day will be general registration day and there will be no enrollment days.

If in a campaign like this spring, where they may be but a single candidate of each party for each office, the primary can be dispensed with, and the sole candidates who have filed nomination papers will be regarded as being legally nominated. In several counties, such a condition occurred this spring.

Meetings Close Next Sunday.

The meetings which are being held at the Baptist church will close next Sunday, April 20. On that day there will be three services, 10:30 A. M., 3:00 and 7:30 P. M. On last Sunday the services were well attended. In the morning the evangelist spoke on "Growth" and the message was well received and many comments were made to show it was a very practical sermon. In the afternoon Mr. Eskine spoke on "Men Only." Quite a good audience gathered and heard one of the most stirring addresses ever delivered to "Men Only" in this city. In the evening, the message was on "Sowing and Reaping," those who heard it will not soon forget it. If you haven't heard Mr. Eskine it will pay you to make an effort to be present this week. A rousing song service each evening lasting about fifteen minutes, led by Rev. B. Atchison and chorus choir, is a very helpful feature of the meetings.

Begin Work at Once.

Tuesday the board of county road commissioners met in this city in joint session with the newly elected board. The engineers were instructed to immediately complete the survey of the proposed county roads leading from the three cities so work could commence at once.

CHAPTER XV. I Discover Two Ghosts.

THE ghost I believed to be still in the upper halls of the house, and now that I was in a position to watch the ladder by which he had entered I felt confident that I had cut off his retreat. I was surveying the cellar when I heard faint sounds in a new direction. Far away under the house and remote from the secret steps some one was moving forward, and rapidly too. The ghost that I believed to have disappeared into the fourth floor hall must then have changed the line of his retreat and descended by one of the regular stairways.

I blew out my candle and stood with my back to the wall of the long corridor on which opened the various store-rooms, the heating plant, laundry and other necessities of the modern house. My ghost was coming in haste—a haste that did not harmonize with the stately tread of the spooks of popular superstition. A slower pace and I should doubtless have fled before him, but quick, light steps echoed in the dark corridor, and I gathered courage from the thought that ghosts create echoes no more than they cast shadows.

As the steps drew nearer I prepared myself to spring upon him. I must unconsciously have taken a step, for he paused suddenly, stood still for a moment, then turned and scamped back the way he had come. After him I went as fast as I could run. The recent paved corridor was four or five feet wide, and I plunged through the dark at my best speed. At the end of the corridor I was pretty certain of my quarry, and I made ready to grapple with him. Then as I plunged into the wall my hands touched a man's face and for a moment clutched the collar of his coat. He had been waiting for me to strike the wall, and as he slipped out of my grasp he ran back to the wall with a force that knocked the wind out of me, but I got myself together with the loss of only an instant and renewed pursuit. I had no fear but that if he attempted to reach the open by means of the coal hole I should catch him on the ladder, and I sprinted for all I was worth to make sure of him.

My fleeting grasp of the man's collar and the agility with which he had slipped from my clasp had settled the ghost question, and I had now resolved the intruder into a common thief.

As I reached the old stairway he was mounting it two steps at a time, as I judged from the sound. I had hoped to catch and dispose of him without alarming the house, but it seemed inevitable now that the chase would end in such fashion as to arouse the company assembled in the library.

I heard him stumble and fall headlong at the door above. Then he shot off into the still darkened hall, and when I had gained the top I lost track of him for a moment. I paused and was about to strike a match when he resigned his flight, and I was forced to grapple with the fact that some one else was pursuing him. I held my match unstruck upon this new disclosure and stepped back within the concealed doors and waited. Up and down the hall two persons were running, and when they reached the ends of the corridor I heard hands touch the wall and the sound of dodging, and then almost instantly the two ran.

"Bounders, I say. Bounders!" he gasped.

ners dashed by me again. The man was so dark that I saw nothing, but as the runners passed the door I felt the rush of air caused by their flight. Three or four times this had happened, and then, still without having made a light, I thrust out my foot at the next return of the unseen runners. Some one tripped and fell headlong, and I promptly flung myself upon him.

My prisoner's resistance engaged my best attention a moment, but when I had sat upon his legs and got hold of his struggling hands some one stoils softly by me. My prisoner, too, heard and was attentive. Not only did I experience the same sensation as on the previous night of a passing near by, but I was conscious of the same faint perfume, as of a flower scent—half caught in a garden at night, that had added to my mystification before. Then without the slightest warning the lights flashed on and a door closed somewhere, but it was not the hidden one leading down into the remnant of the old house, for my prisoner's hand and shoulders lay across its threshold. He sighed deeply, bringing my descent back to him, and I found myself gazing into the blinking eyes of Lord Arrowood.

"Bounders, I say. Bounders!" he gasped.

"In the circumstances, Lord Arrowood, I should not call names. Will you tell me what you mean by running through this house in this fashion? Stand up and give an account of yourself."

I helped him to his feet and bent over the stair rail leading down to the third floor. Evidently our strange transactions beneath and above had not disturbed the assembled suitors and their hostess, but in common decency Lord Arrowood must be disposed of promptly. There was no doubt about that.

"I was an ass to try it," muttered his lordship, pulling his tie into shape. "And now I want to get out. I want to go away from here."

He was tugging at the belt of his Norfolk coat, and something between it and his waistcoat evidently gave him concern. Our conversation was carried on in half whispers. He was so crestfallen that if it hadn't been for the necessity of maintaining silence I should have laughed outright.

"Out with it, my lord. What have you stuck in your coat?"
"They're bounders, all the rest of 'em," he asserted doggedly, "but I believe you to be a gentleman."

"I thank you, Lord Arrowood, for this mark of confidence. Open your coat! I declare that even if you have lifted a bit of the Hollister plate I will let you go."

Reluctantly, shamefacedly and still breathing hard from his late exertions, Lord Arrowood of Arrowood, Hants, England, obeyed me. There were five buttons to the close fitting jacket, and the loosening of every succeeding one seemed to give him pain. Then, with his head slightly lifted as though in disdain of me, he held out for my observation a pie, in the pan in which it had been baked. The top crust was browned to a alecky. Its edges were erumped neatly, and in spite of the fact that I had so lately dined sumptuously at Miss Hollister's hospitable board, at sight of this alluring pastry I experienced the sharp twinges of aroused appetite.

"Now you have it, and I hope you are satisfied," said Lord Arrowood. "Kindly allow me to retire by the way I came."

"First," I replied, sobered by the gravity of his manner, "it would interest me as a student of character to know just what species of pie threw you to this burglarious deed."

"I have reason to think," he answered, with tears in his eyes, "that it is gooseberry. I was hungry. If you must know the truth, and, having sampled the old lady's pies this morning, with nothing to eat since, I saw the coal hole open and ladder beneath, and the rest of it was easy. If you and the other chaps hadn't chased me and over the estate I'd been off with my pie and no harm done. The house is haunted by the legend. When you had about which me down in the cellar and cut me off from the ladder and closed me up here the ghost took me and it was that terrible thing that set me on the spirits would certainly have killed me. O Lord, what a night!"

"You are sure you speak the truth when you say that the coal hole was open and that you found the ladder there when you came?"

"No manner of doubt of it. As I have already said, I believe you to be a gentleman, and between gentlemen certain candidities may pass. You wouldn't be possible between a gentleman and his cattle down there."

He jerked his head scornfully to indicate the stairs below.

I bowed with such dignity as is possible when addressing a nobleman whom you have just caught in the act of lifting a gooseberry pie from a lady's pantry—on pie which you held performed in your hands."

"The fact is that I was without the price of food, and, to repeat, I was beastly hungry."

"Poverty and hunger, my lord, are pardonable sins, but gooseberry pies are sacred to Hezekiah. My impressions of Hezekiah are the pleasanteest, and I cannot allow you to go between her and the pie I hold in my hands. If you will accompany me below I will undertake to gain access to the pie vault, return this pie to its proper place and hand you out the foot of the ladder on apple pie. I dare say it never will be missed, but from what I know of Hezekiah, any trifling with her attitude would be a crime punishable at common law."

His lordship seemed reassured, and we were about to descend by the coated stair when he arrested me.

"Mr. Ames, you are a gentleman and possess a generous heart. We understand each other perfectly, and as I have every reason to believe that my suit is hopeless I ask the loan of $5 until I can confer with my friend, the British consul at New York. I shall sail at once for England."

He stepped down before me into the dark stairway, and I closed the door after me and followed him. I found my way to the pie pantry without difficulty, returned the gooseberry pie to its proper shelf, chose an apple pie and gave it, with a five dollar note, to Lord Arrowood.

At the bottom of the ladder he pressed my hand feelingly and expressed his gratitude in terms that would have touched a harder heart than mine. Then, having closed the coal hole and hidden the ladder under a pile of wood, I resumed my pursuit of the ghost.

I lighted my way with a candle through the lost chambers of the old house, up the hidden stairway and out into the fourth floor hall again. The old spair, I found on closer observation, reached only from the second to the fourth floor, and below this had been placed with lumber carefully preserved from the earlier house. There was nothing so strange, after all, about the hidden stairway, though I was convinced that this had been no idea of Pepperton's, but that he had merely obeyed the orders of his eccentric client, the umbrella and dyspepsia cure millionaire.

I had no sooner let myself through the secret door into the upper hall than I was aware of a disturbance in the library below. I heard exclamations from the men, and as I ran down to ward—the third floor Miss Octavia's voice rose above the tumult.
"We must have patience, gentlemen. Children are subject to moods just like human beings, and we are fortunate in having in the house a gentleman who is an expert in such matters."

"If you wait for that man to mend your chimney you will wait until doomsday."

So spoke John Stewart Dick, taking his vengeance of me with my client and hostess. I might have forgiven him, but I could not forgive Hartley Wiggles.

"He doesn't know any more about chimneys than the man in the moon," my old friend was saying between coughs.

And then quite unmistakably I smelt smoke, and bending farther over the rail and peering down the stair well I saw smoke pouring from the library into the hall. It seemed to be in greater volume tonight than at previous manifestations. A gray blue cloud was filling the lower hall and rising toward me. I ran quickly to the third floor, to the chamber whose entrance was served by the library chimney. The lights in the third floor hall winked out as I opened the door. I heard a step behind me, and I turned to find a man in a nightgown standing in the doorway. He was looking at me with a curious expression, and I saw that he was holding a candle.

"I did not expect to see you here," he said. "I was looking for you in the library. The lights were out, and I was wondering what had happened. I saw smoke coming out of the chimney, and I was afraid something was wrong."

"The hall was perfectly quiet. The door leading down the hidden stair was invisible, and I had not yet learned how it might be opened from the hall, though Bassford Hollister undoubtedly left the house by this means after my interview with him on the foot. And reminded of the foot, I opened the trunk room door and peered into its dark corner, and, looking up, I marked the presence of the true door scene in the evening. As I looked on the threshold of the trunk room, my hand on the knob and the candle thrust well before me, I heard a slight furtive movement to my left and behind the door. I listened to the murmur of talk below for a moment, then cautiously advanced my candle farther into the room. I took one step tonight the air mildly it brushed my cheek again. I have no words to describe the strange effect of that touch. I felt my scalp creep and cold chills ran down my spine. It certainly came from above, and it was not in a hand, unless a hand of wonderful lightness. Certainly no human arm could reach down the stair well to where I stood.

I waited for its recurrence a moment, but it came no more. Then a sudden prompting I stole swiftly to the fourth floor, behind my candle, gazed about. I thought it well to have the electric light above, for my candle had once too often plunged the darkness at critical moments, and candle in my hands was not subject to its trickery.

The hall was perfectly quiet. The door leading down the hidden stair was invisible, and I had not yet learned how it might be opened from the hall, though Bassford Hollister undoubtedly left the house by this means after my interview with him on the foot. GOIN' TO TOWN.

It used to be that dear old dad Drove Dobbin into town.
 It was a rough and rocky road,
 First up a hill, then down.
 He used to pull way out the road
 When he would meet a man.
 Sea be, "Th' roads is heavy, an'
 I'll give him all I can."
 Now dad has got a red machine.
 He whips along in style.
 He leaves behind a string of dust
 That stretches half a mile.

And when he meets his neighbors,
 Why,
 He hurls his flying wedge—
 He scatters them to right and left
 And makes 'em hunt th' hedge.

WANT BIG ROAD BONDS.

Over $500,000 to Be Proposed in Texas Counties.

The taxpayers of a number of counties and precincts of Texas are petitioning their respective commissioners courts to call elections to vote upon the proposition of issuing road bonds in large amounts.

It is proposed to issue $300,000 of these bonds in Harris county, $120,000 in Wood county, $25,000 in Refugio county, $100,000 in Hamilton county, $200,000 in Orange county, $40,000 in Medina county and $150,000 in Webb county.

Starters of Good Roads.

If highways are an evolution from the primary paths made by animals and men the first roadmakers did not make their paths straight certainly, and many a road today is a monument to the leaders in roadmaking of the long ago. Nevertheless it is said that some animals, the buffalo especially, were pretty fair engineers. They had an eye for grade, which cannot be said of some of their successors. In the west engineers hunting pathways for railroads are said to have largely followed buffalo trails.

Human Nature.

 than their fathers, and all girls think they can keep house better than their mothers. They continue to think this Birds That Carry Their Young.

 The woodcock, it is said, has been known to carry away her young when threatened with danger. She places them on her spread feet, pressing them between the toes and the breast. A naturalist says many woodcocks also carry their young down to marshy

Grange Column

Harmony Grange.

Harmony grange has held two very successful meetings recently, both being well attended with good programs well carried out. The one held on Tuesday evening April 8, was especially interesting and valuable. The proposition to change the night of meeting was laid on the table indefinitely so we will continue to meet on the 2nd and 4th Tuesday evenings of each month. The following program, which had been prepared by our newly elected lecturer, James Watt, was carried out in full.

Song, by Grange.
Discussion, "The best and most profitable farm crop," by H. L. and O. D. Willson.

Recitation, Mrs. Anna Warden.
Vocal Solo, Miss Alice Warden.
Discussion, "The use of the disc harrow," by O. D. Willson, J. A. Newville and H. L. Willson.

Discussion, "The first thing to do on the farm in the spring," L. D. Willson, James Simmons, Mrs. Maria Burdick and W. H. Willson.
Instrumental Solo, Miss Ethel Travis.

On account of the Pomona grange meeting the ladies committee announced that they would not meet until two weeks after. Home-made candy was the last thing to be discussed, it being furnished by Mrs. Mabel Willson, for which she received a vote of thanks by the grange.

Wilson Grange.

At the last regular meeting of Wilson grange there were thirty-three members present and four visitors from Deer Lake and Harmony granges.

After a short business session followed the lecturer's program consisting of several songs and readings, a story by Brother Griffin of Deer Lake, and a couple of songs by Brother Simmons of Harmony were enjoyed by the members.

The dance committee announced a dance for April 19 and the ladies auxiliary announced that they would hold a meeting March 28 at the hall for the purpose of electing officers.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

Eggs for Hatching.

Pure bred Black Orpington eggs from select matings, $1.50 and $3.10 per setting of 15. A few choice cockerels and pullets for sale. Inquire A. J. Usher, Courier office.—Adv. 144f

Ironton Grange.

Ironton grange met in regular session April 8 with a good attendance. One visitor was present from Wilson grange.

One candidate was instructed in the mysteries of the first and second degrees.

Lecturer's program consisted of songs, stories and recitations.

For good of the order the kitchen question was discussed, ending by discharging the committee and the rejecting of all former plans. It was decided to have a special meeting April 15 for making new plans for a kitchen, after which grange closed in regular form.

Next regular meeting will be held April 22. All members try and be present. Visitors welcome.

Seed Corn and Potatoes.

Home grown seed corn, 100 per cent test. Also a few curly seed potatoes. Inquire Fred White, Route No. 2, phone 147-2r.—Adv. 16ff Peninsula Grange.

Peninsula grange met in special session April 10, with Worthy Master Ruhling in the chair.

One candidate was obligated in the degrees.

Committees were appointed for the entertainment of Pomona April 17.

Meeting nights were set for first and third Saturdays of the month at 8:00 p. m.

Next regular meeting April 19.

A SUCCESSFUL CONCRETE ROAD

Transformation of Old Highway by Iowans.

ONE OF THE BEST IN STATE.

The "Grade Road," Once a Two Mile Terror to Farmers, is Now Pointed Out With Pride—Used Automobile Tax Money.

Probably one of the very worst pieces of road in Iowa existed for years in Benton county, just across the Cedar river north of Vinton. It was known as the "grade road" and is well known, especially to every automobile tourist who was unfortunate enough to be forced to travel it.

The grade road proper is about two miles in length, leading directly from the north end of the Cedar river bridge. It traverses very low land, which overflows in time of high water and presents a number of difficulties which under the old system baffled the roadmakers. This grade is built up like a railroad grade, and the height varies from probably ten to twenty feet. During freshets the river would cover the entire country. In some places running over the road, and the consequence was that when the waters receded the grade was honeycombed with washouts. Various ways were tried to resist the water, such as using crushed stone, dirt, etc., but every year found the surface of the road a little worse than the year before and so full of "chuck" holes that a real old roadway road was a boulevard in comparison. It was almost impossible to get over it with a load, much less an automobile.

As the ordinary road tax in this township was entirely too small to properly take care of even this one piece of road, the building of a permanent highway was a difficult matter. However, early last spring the Vinton Ad. club took the matter up, and what was the worst piece of road in Iowa is now the best and enjoys the distinction of being the first concrete county road to be built in Iowa. A committee was appointed by the Ad.

club to go before the supervisors and urge prompt action. It was found that with Benton county's share of the new state automobile tax coming in, several thousand dollars were available. The farmers served by this villainous road were then approached and together with business interests of Vinton contributed $2,800 toward the cost of making a start toward two miles of permanent concrete road.

The work was let to a responsible contractor at $1.03 per square yard, and the finished road is a joy to look upon and better still to travel over. It is expected at an early date to complete the entire two miles and perhaps more.

The road constructed this year amounts to 2,000 lineal feet. The road way is sixteen feet wide, with center eight inches thick, grading down to six inches thick at the edges, which gives it sufficient crown for drainage purposes. The curb is twelve inches and is inverted, extending into the ground, which will greatly aid in the resistance to the high water.

The entire cost of this paving was approximately $5,000, of which Vinton business men and farmers directly interested contributed $2,800, and the county paid $2,200 out of the automobile tax. This does not include the grading on each side of the cement roadway, which was let to a local man and cost $500. It is well worth the price and no doubt next year will see the work of this year extended at least as much more.

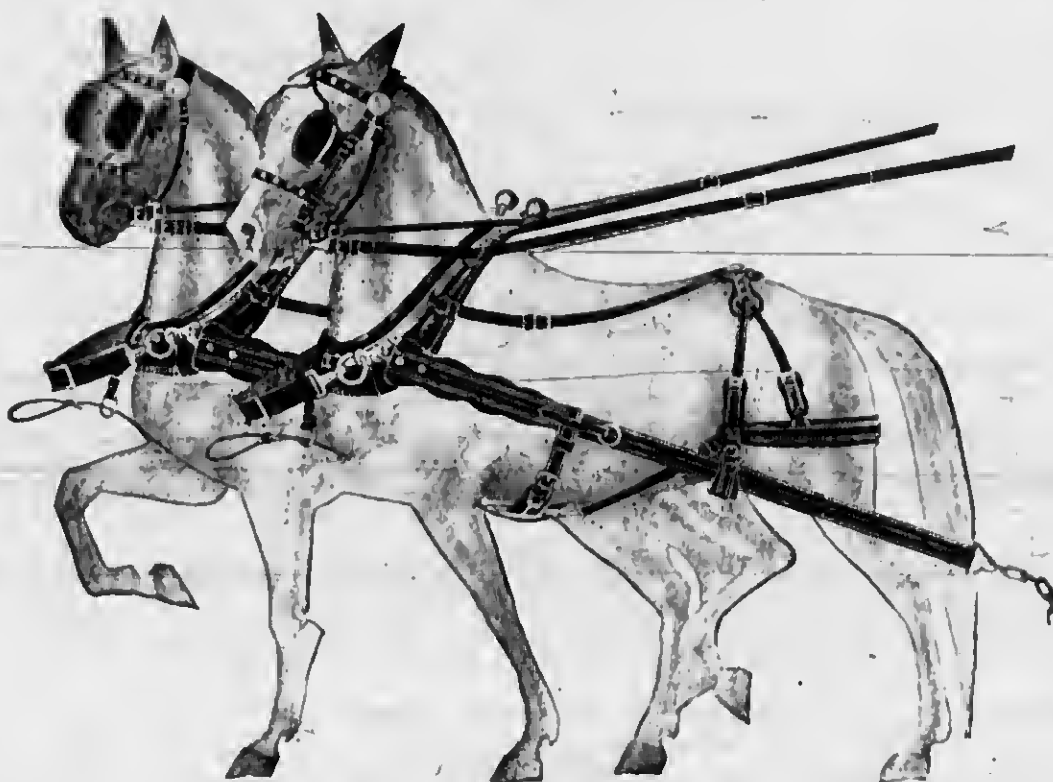

Value of Good Roads.
Three years ago the farmers of Spottsylvania county, Va., spent $100,000 on good roads. Here is how the value of farmlands increased as a result:

Owner.	Acres.	Price, 1910.	Price, 1912.	Increase, per cent.
George B. Shay.....	120	$3,500	$5,000	42
Susan M. Alsop.....	40	6,000	8,250	37
Tommy Todd.....	10	1,500	2,200	47
Mrs. Elmer Wallace.....	45	5,000	12,500	150
Thomas J. Price.....	37	2,800	4,400	57
William Thorburn.....	125	3,000	10,000	233

Good Highways Uplifting.
There is nothing that contributes more to rural uplift than good roads. For social and economic improvement communication must be easy. Without good roads it is impossible for the people of rural communities to meet and discuss ways and means of improving rural life.

SAYS STAY IN MICHIGAN

Is the Advice Given by George H. Van Pelt to Michigan People.

WRITES LETTER TO COURIER

Giving Impressions of His Recent Trip Through the South.

Or. Thielens Making Good in Knoxville—The Whole Country Waking up to Good Roads—Asheville is a Nice Place.

I have just returned from a trip through the south and passed through the flooded district, but as the newspapers have given such graphic accounts of the terrible devastation and misery caused thereby, will not attempt to say more, as words are inadequate to describe it.

In all southern papers I noticed articles, booming the towns and country in which the papers were published, which prompted me to say a little something in regard to "staying in Michigan."

In the Grand Traverse country, of which I regard Charlevoix county the center, there are unlimited opportunities for the small farmer and fruit grower. In looking about for proof of this, you can reflect a moment and recall to mind some comparatively poor man who, only a few years ago, purchased a small farm or so-called his method of farming that, by proper management, an orchard was developed that has today placed him in good financial circumstances. This section offers all advantages for the tiller of the soil and orchard grower. Here, land can be bought cheap and on favorable terms, and those who remain and show the pluck and determination to succeed will, think, get better results than those who sell at a sacrifice and go to other sections of the country. While thinking of selling out, do not forget that health is a most important question to be considered, and where can one go and find a healthier climate than in the Grand Traverse country? I say, no place on earth. Just watch the next crowd of people you meet and see how much more sturdy and energetic are those who have lived where the snow and frost blow through their whiskers than those who have lived in the south where they have no snow or frost. Northern Michigan apples are becoming known all over the United States and Europe, and there will be no going back, but a general advancement, providing fruit growers spray their trees thoroughly and in season, which in time will exterminate all pests. They must also exercise great care in picking and packing the fruit for market, in order to get the best results.

While at Knoxville, I had the pleasure of meeting our own townspeople, Dr. and Mrs. Thielens, and am afraid the latter would feel too much flattered if I said all I could about the improvement in her health and how well she looks. As to the doctor, from what I learned from prominent people with whom I conversed, I am thoroughly satisfied that he is more than making good, as those with whom I came in contact spoke of the great success he has had, either in attending them, their families, or their friends. His offices are among the most delightful, pleasant and complete of any that I have ever seen, two rooms beautifully furnished with expensive furniture, and a laboratory, which I should judge was as complete as any could be outside of a large institution. Mrs. Thielens is not only well and happy, but the children have grown to be very interesting and charming.

Knoxville is a beautiful city with a population of about 60,000. It has a fine climate, the elevation being about 1,100 feet, and a rich farming country surrounds it. Vegetation there is about the same as with us in Charlevoix, the season starting from the first or middle of June. They were far south of the flooded district, and thus far have never had any floods or severe storms. It is a large jobbing center, one of the largest I know of for its size, particularly in boots and shoes, and they are contemplating building a large shoe factory some time during the coming season, which of course interests the writer. The farmers make a specialty of poultry raising and Saturday will find them bringing large quantities of eggs and poultry into the market. They also have good, fat, native beef, which is medium priced. The marble industry of East Tennessee employs 10,000 men, and in the nearby districts they have large zinc, copper and aluminum mines. Of course all these mountainous towns have great wealth of water power, and Knoxville is particularly fortunate in this respect.

Asheville, where I spent about six weeks, has not only a national but an international reputation for beauty and climate. The view from the big Battery Park Hotel, which is in the center of the town, is one of the most beautiful in the world. I met many people there from abroad, as well as from nearly all portions of the United States, and that was their verdict. They are passing very strict laws in regard to housing tuberculosis patients in the center of the town, which I think is very commendable. The best hotels and boarding houses do not take these patients. Automobiles are as plentiful there as flies in a restaurant kitchen or a candy shop without screens. The Cadillac seems to have the bulge on the others so far as a medium priced car is concerned, many thinking it as good as any other car made at a much greater cost. The little Ford comes in as a great mountain climber, and they claim there that no mountain is too steep, no road too rocky nor no mud too deep for these two cars to go through.

I do not expect to go north this summer, and if anybody wishes to buy the Van Pelt home in Norwood, or the two cottages I have there known as the Pearl place and Jim Chase store, or any other property I may have, I wish they would communicate with me.

In closing, I wish to state that the whole country seems to be alive to the necessity of building good roads, and I am glad to say that the Western Michigan Development Bureau's publicity service is doing a great work for our country up there. By their reports, I see that Crystal Lake township in Benzie county, has voted to bond itself for $25,000, Green Lake township, Grand

HER SUFFERINGS ENDED

Wife of Prominent Business Man Passed Away Tuesday Morning.

Illness of Long Duration—Leaves Husband and Little Daughter to Mourn Her Loss.

Again we are called upon to record the death of one of our most highly respected young matrons, the sufferings of Mrs. Fred S. Myers having ended Tuesday evening.

Bessie Benson was born in Fountain, Minnesota, thirty-five years ago. In 1900 she was married to Fred S. Myers, and after a few years residence in Minnesota, came to this city in 1907. Mr. Myers engaged in the confectionery and fruit business.

While Mrs. Myers has not been in good health for several years her fatal illness dates back for about a year, from which time she has been a very patient sufferer. Everything that loving care could devise was done to bring her relief, including a trip to California early this winter, but all was in vain.

She leaves, besides her husband, one daughter, Marjorie, aged ten, her mother and three sisters, Mrs. Art Wessos of California, Mrs. Joseph Schmelzer of Minnesota and Miss Alpha Benson of this city.

The funeral was held this afternoon, under the auspices of the Christian Science society, and the O. E. S., of which she was a member. She was also a member of the Lady Maccabees.

Mrs. Myers was quiet and retiring in disposition, but her friends recognized her many sterling qualities, and the sympathy of the community goes out her husband and daughter in their loss of a loving wife and mother.

SPECIAL BULLETINS ISSUED

On Topics of Interest by Michigan Experiment Station.

Will be Sent Free to Those Who are Interested Upon Their Request.

The state experiment station has issued a number of special bulletins which will be sent free to those interested. The list follows:

Small Fruit Culture.
The Michigan Experiment Station has just issued a bulletin on "Small Fruit Culture." This bulletin gives in a brief form, complete and practical information on the culture of strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, dewberries, currants and gooseberries. Specific directions are given concerning planting, fertilizing, cultivating, pruning, control of insect pests, selection of varieties, etc. This special bulletin No. 39 may be secured by writing to Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan.

Directions for Spraying Fruit Trees.
The Michigan Agricultural Experiment Station now has the 1913 spraying bulletin ready for distribution. It gives in a clear, plain way the times to spray fruit trees, berry bushes and potatoes; the material to use, how to prepare them at home or use commercial kinds. You can secure a copy free by sending a request to Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan, asking for special bulletin No. 61.

Celery Culture in Michigan.
The subject of "Celery Culture in Michigan" is very completely and practically covered in the new special bulletin No. 60 just issued by the Michigan Experiment Station. The rich, much lands and comparatively cool, moist summers make Michigan conditions almost ideal for producing this crop. This bulletin tells what soils are adapted to celery; what fertilizers to use; when to plant and transplant; how to blanch the plants; and also gives information on varieties, diseases, storing, marketing, etc. This bulletin may be secured free from Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan.

Growing Cucumbers for Profit.
Farmers located near pickling stations will be interested to know that the Michigan Experiment Station has issued a new bulletin on growing cucumbers on a commercial scale. The information in this bulletin is given by a man who has had years of experience in the business and will be valuable to any one engaged in cucumber growing. A copy may be obtained by writing to Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan, for circular No. 19.

Making Lawns.
Some valuable suggestions and practical information on the subject of "Making a Lawn" are contained in a new circular just issued by the Michigan Experiment Station. This circular No. 29 may be secured by writing to Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan.

SEVEN ALREADY HAVE ENTERED

Into the Race of International Great Lakes Flying Boat Cruise.

At Least Fifteen of the America's Most Famous Flyers to Appear in the Contest.

Seven noted flying boat pilots are now entered in the International Great Lakes Flying Boat Cruise, which starts from Chicago on July 1 and finishes at Detroit a few days later after passing through the city.

Charles C. Witmer, most daring and skillful of Glenn H. Curtiss' air and water flyers, Weldon B. Cooke and Frank H. Harrison of Glendonberry Connection, are the three latest nominations for the cruise.

Witmer is now in Russia where he is instructing the Russian army pilots in the art of handling the Curtiss flying boat. He has been in Europe since last May, having delivered American made flying boats to the Italian, French, German and Russian governments, and demonstrated the craft to the army there. Witmer will return to America within the next three weeks and come to Chicago with Harold McCormick's Curtiss flying boat. It is this machine he will handle on the cruise. Two other Curtiss entries will be made during the next few days. Beckwith Havens and John D. Cooper will be the pilots named in the formal entries.

Weldon B. Cooke is the famous California flyer who has a big flying boat factory at Sandusky, Ohio. Cooke will probably enter an additional craft shortly, naming Captain Thomas Dick Gunn the noted Chinese aviator as pilot.

Frank Harrison, a Wright graduate will fly his own machine in the big contest. Harrison is about the most dexterous of the New England air boat aviators and is due in Chicago a month in advance of the start of the cruise.

The other entries already filed are Tony Janusz, Omaha to New Orleans over water flier, Hugh Robinson, winner for America in the 1912 Monte Carlo Carnival, Tom Benoist and Max Lillie in the Chicago-made Weckler-Armstrong-Lillie air boat.

Fifteen starters are now assured according to the promise of the contest committee. William H. Pickens, director of the cruise has written that he will visit this city within the next ten days to arrange the local details of the cruise.

MAY USE MOTOR CAR

Pere Marquette Officials Considering Their Use the Coming Season.

It is probable that a motor car will make the run on the Pere Marquette between this city and Petoskey the coming summer. The officials are considering it and things seem to point to such a means of transportation. Time, coal, labor, noise and dirt could be saved if a motor car was used instead of the engine and two cars. The car could take a tender if necessary.

LIGHTING IS BAD

Eyesight of Children Being Injured in Michigan School Houses.

Michigan is steadily becoming a state of spectacle wearers on account of the improper lighting of schoolhouses. Except those buildings which were erected according to the plans of an architect who thoroughly understands schoolhouse construction, there is scarcely a building in the state, rural, town or city, which does not violate the principles of correct lighting.

Experts on this question are a unit in declaring that light should come only from the left side of the ceiling. In most small buildings, light is admitted from both sides, making cross lights which are injurious. It is almost criminal to permit children to face the light. Teachers are compelled to, in many cases to their detriment and at least one state makes it unlawful to require a teacher to do this. In some rooms, children sit with their backs to the light, thus shading the work before them with their bodies making a half light which is decidedly injurious. Merely changing the seating will often correct evils.

Intelligent use of window shades will do much to correct construction defects. In nine cases out of ten, the shades are improperly installed. They should be placed at the bottom of the window and drawn up instead of down. In this way, the light is shut off from the nearly desks where it is too strong, but is admitted to the parts of the room where it is needed.

ASKED FOR PICTURES

Of Western Michigan Scenes to be Used in School Geographies.

On two succeeding days—the Western Michigan Development Bureau received requests from publishers of school geographies for photographs picturing the industries of the western Michigan region, that these photographs might be used in illustrating new supplements to geographies now in general use. Fortunately the bureau was able to fill both requests and to supply the publishers with pictures that tell the story of the prosperity that is beginning to reign.

G. R. & I. BEGINS LAND CASE AGAIN

Emmet Settlers Are Made Defendants in United States Court.

Efforts Again Will be Made to Take Lands From Them—Hearing April 29.

The fight waged for several tracts of land in Bear Creek and Springvale townships, Emmet county, between the G. R. & I. railroad and twenty homesteaders is about to be opened again by the former company, as is shown by the petition asking permission to state their case in a hearing Tuesday, April 29, in the federal court at Grand Rapids.

Proceedings were commenced by the railroad company four years ago to get the "squatters" as they were termed, from the land. The railroad claims that it was granted the titles to the land by the government. However, homesteaders took possession, proved up and the government gave them clear titles. The railroad took the matter to the courts, but the government intervened in behalf of the farmers, and they were granted patents, though the case was never tried.

Now the railroad company comes along with a supplementary complaint, and will once more endeavor to get the land from the farmers.

Grand Lodge Degrees.

An announced last week, an I. O. O. F. school of instruction will be held in this city May 7. Grand Master Harry L. McNair of Paw Paw and Grand Secretary Fred A. Rogers of Reading will be present and the members of the different lodges in this vicinity will attend.

In addition to the regular school of instruction the Grand Lodge degrees will be conferred on those eligible to receive them.

WILL BE BIG CONVENTION

Laymen's Missionary Movement at Traverse City Next Week.

Banquet Will be Given—Speaker of International Reputation Will be Present.

The largest and most important convention that has ever been held in this section will be that of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, that will be in Traverse City, April 27, 28 and 29. They are fifty conventions being held in different parts of the United States and two in Michigan, Lansing and Traverse City. This is a meeting entirely for men and any man can be a delegate whether he belongs to a church or not.

Thousands of leaflets are being mailed all throughout this region explaining the object. Men who are posted and are good speakers have been chosen to visit all the towns in this region and fully explain this great movement and the coming convention. The expenses are met by each delegate paying one dollar, which entitles him to a plate at the big banquet held on the evening of the 28th and to all the sessions of the convention. The registration slips should be signed as soon as the literature is received and mailed to James R. Coad, secretary, care of the Needham Business college. Speakers of international reputation will address the convention and any person who is interested at all in missions and the betterment of men should make it a point to attend this convention. The movement is not a missionary society and collects no money for missions nor does it supplant existing agencies, it endeavors to supplement and make more effective the work that has been done. The different churches should elect delegates at once and others plan to be present. Free lodging and breakfast will be furnished all who register before April 25th.

PYTHIANS GATHERED

Big Meeting Was Held at Petoskey Wednesday Evening of Last Week.

A big delegation of Charlevoix Pythians attended the meeting of the Petoskey lodge last Wednesday night. A large delegation from other surrounding towns was also present. The evening festivities began with a supper at 6:30. Addresses were made by W. E. Hammond, Grand Keeper of Records and Seal, H. S. Harmon of Battle Creek, Fred Lovell, Chancellor, Commander of Pellston lodge and Dick Lewis, Chancellor, Commander of Charlevoix lodge.

In connection with the business meeting the rank of page was conferred by the Charlevoix team which has a reputation for their work all over Michigan.

PORTER--WELLS

Former Charlevoix Girl Married April 3 in Northwest Canada.

Married, at Saskatoon, Northwest Canada, April 3, Jesse Porter of Ellettsburg and Miss Belle Wells of Blincher. Mrs. Wells is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Wells, formerly of this county.

The bride was beautifully dressed in white net over blue silk and carried a wreath of bridal roses. The bride's brother, Orville Wells, was best man and Miss Emmaline McDevitt was bridesmaid. The ring ceremony was used. Rev. C. Brown of Saskatoon, officiating.

The many friends of the bride in this locality wish Mr. and Mrs. Porter many happy years.

Business Change.

W. E. Parmelee has purchased the business conducted by O. D. Hammond under the name of the Builders Supply Company, and is now prepared to supply his customers with everything that goes into the construction of a house.

While Mr. Parmelee did not buy the block and gravel business, which is still retained by Mr. Hammond, he has arranged so he can furnish the same to his patrons.

This is the Stove Polish YOU Should Use

It's different from others because more care is taken in the making and the materials used are of higher grade.

Black Silk Stove Polish

Makes brilliant, silky polish that does not rub off or dust off, and the shine lasts four times as long as ordinary stove polish. Used on range, stove, and boiler. Sold by hardware dealers.

Use it on your cook stove, your furnace, or your car radiator. It will make them shine like new. Your dealer is authorized to refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Black Silk Stove Polish works on all surfaces of metal, brass, copper, and iron. It is not a grease or oil. It is a polish.

MAY PROVE FATAL

When Will Charlevoix People Learn the Importance of It?

Backache is only a simple thing at first.

But if you find it from the kid, neys.

That serious kidney troubles may follow.

That dropsy or Bright's disease may be the fatal end.

You will be glad to know the following experience.

It is the statement of a Charlevoix citizen.

Mrs. R. M. Nekeel, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix, Mich., says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly. I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. My body bloated badly and I had weak back and severe pains in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I obtained Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they gave me relief in every way."

CHAPTER XVI. Lady's Slipper.

AS I recall it she was very much at her ease. She sat on our foot and the other beat the trunk lightly. She was bareheaded, and the candle light was nixing acquaintance with the gold in her hair. She wore her white sweater, as on that day in the orchard, and with much gravity, as our eyes met, she thrust a hand into its pocket and drew out a cracker. I was not half so surprised at finding her there as I was at her manner now that she was caught. She seemed neither distressed, astonished nor afraid.

"Well, Miss Hezekiah," I said, "half-suspected you all along."

"Wise chimney man! You were a little slow about it though."

"I was indeed. You gave me a run for my money."

She finished her cracker at the third bite, slung her hands together to free them of possible crumbs and was about to speak when she stopped lightly from the trunk, bent her head toward the door, and then stepped back again and faced me imperturbably.

"And now that you've found me, Mr. Chimney Man, the joke's on you after all."

"She laid her hand on the door and swung it nearly shut. I had heard what she had heard. Miss Octavia was coming upstairs. She had exchanged a few words with the Swedish maid on the second floor landing, and Hezekiah's quick ear had heard her. But Hezekiah's equanimity was disconcerting. Even with her aunt close at hand she showed not the slightest alarm. She resumed her seat on the trunk, and her head thumped it tranquilly.

"The joke's on you, Mr. Chimney Man, because now that you've caught me playing tricks you've got to get me out of trouble."

"What if I don't?"

"Oh, nothing," she answered indifferently, looking me squarely in the eye.

"But your aunt would make no end of a row, and you would cause your sister to lose out with Miss Octavia. As I understand it, you're pledged to keep off the reservation. It was part of the family agreement."

"Mr. Ames, if you are ghost hunting in this part of the house—"

It was Miss Octavia's voice. She was seeking me and would no doubt find me. The sequestration of Hezekiah became now an urgent and delicate matter.

"You caught me," said Hezekiah calmly, "and now you've got to get me out, and I wish you good luck, and, besides, I lost one of my shoes somewhere, and you've got to find that."

In proof of her statement she submitted a shoeless, brown stockinged foot for my observation.

"The one I lost was like this," and Hezekiah thrust forth a neat tan pump rather the worse for wear. "I was on the second floor a bit ago," she began, "and lost my slipper."

"In what mischief, pray?"

"Mr. Ames," called Miss Octavia, her voice close at hand.

"I wanted to see something in Cecilia's room, so I opened her door and walked in—that's all," Hezekiah replied.

"Wicked Hezekiah! Coming into the house is bad enough in all the circumstances. Entering your sister's room is a grievous sin."

"If, Mr. Ames, you are still seeking an explanation of that chimney's behavior—"

It was Miss Octavia, now just outside the door.

"Don't leave that trunk, Hezekiah," I whispered. "I'll do the best I can."

Miss Octavia met me smilingly as I faced her in the hall. She had switched on the lights, and my candle burned yellow in the white electric glow.

Miss Octavia held something in her hand. It required no second glance to tell me that she had found Hezekiah's slipper.

"Mr. Ames," she began, "as you have absented yourself from the library all evening I assume that you have been busy studying my chimneys and seeking for the ghost of that British soldier who was so wantonly slain upon the site of this house."

"I am glad to say that not only is your surmise correct, Miss Hollister, but that I have made great progress in both directions."

"Do you mean to say that you have really found traces of the ghost?"

"Not only that, Miss Hollister, but I have met the ghost face to face—even more, I have had speech with him!"

Her face brightened, her eyes flashed. It was plain that she was immensely pleased.

"And are you able to say from your encounter, that he is in fact a British subject, unreasonably haunting this house—America long after the Declaration" of Independence and Washington's farewell address have passed into literature?"

"You have never spoken a truer word, Miss Hollister; but by means which I am not at liberty to disclose, I have persuaded him not to visit this house again."

"Then," said Miss Hollister, "I can not do less than express my gratitude, though I regret that you did not first allow me to meet him. Still, I dare say that we shall find his bones buried somewhere beneath my foundations. Please assure me that such is your expectation."

"Tomorrow, Miss Hollister, I shall take pleasure in showing you certain hidden chambers in this house which I venture to say will afford you great pleasure. I have tonight discovered a link between the mansion as you know it and an earlier house whose chambers may indeed hide the bones of that British soldier."

"And as for the chimney?"

"And as for the chimney, I give you my word as a professional man that I will never annoy you again, and—therefore beg that you dismiss the subject from your mind."

I saw that she was about to recur to the shoe she held in her hand and at which she glanced frequently with a quizzical expression. This, clearly was an issue that must be met promptly, and I knew of no better way than by lying. Hezekiah herself had plainly stated on the morning of that long eventful day, when she walked into the breakfast room in her aunt's absence and explained Cecilia's trip to town, that it was perfectly fair to dissimulate in making explanations to Miss Hollister—that, in fact, Miss Octavia enjoyed nothing better than the injection of fiction into the affairs of the matter of fact day. Here, then, was my opportunity.

"Miss Hollister," I began boldly, "the slipper you hold in your hand belongs to me, and if you have no immediate use for it I beg that you allow me to retain it for you."

"It is yours, Mr. Ames?"

A lifting of the brows, a widening of the eyes, denoted Miss Octavia's polite surprise.

"Beyond my question it is my property," I asserted.

"Your words interest me greatly, Mr. Ames. As you know, the grim hard life of the twentieth century falls upon me, and I am deeply interested in everything that pertains to adventure and romance. Tell me more, if you are free to do so, of this slipper which I now return to you."

I received Hezekiah's worn little pump into my hands as though it were an object of high consecration.

"As I am nothing if not frank, Miss Hollister, I will confess to you that this shoe came into my possession in a very curious way. One day last spring I was in Boston, having been called there on professional business. In the evening I left my hotel for a walk, crossed the common, took a turn through the public garden, where many devoted lovers adorned the benches, and then strolled aimlessly along Beacon street."

"I was passing a house which I have not since been able to identify exactly, though I have several times revisited Boston in the hope of doing so, when suddenly and without any warning whatever this slipper dropped at my feet. All the houses in the neighborhood seemed deserted, with windows and doors tightly boarded, and my closest scrutiny failed to discover any opening from which the slipper might have been flung. The reason I so desecrated an act of violence against foreign to its dignity and repose that I could scarce believe that I held that bit of tan leather in my hand. Nor did its unaccountable precipitation into the street seem the act of a housemaid, nor could I believe that a nursery governess had thus sought diversion from the roof above. I hesitated for a moment, not knowing how to meet this emergency. Then I boldly attacked the bell of the house from which I believed the slipper to have proceeded. I rang until a policeman, whose speech was fragment of the Irish coast, made me desist, informing me that the family had only the previous day left for the shore. The house, he assured me, was utterly vacant. That Miss Hollister, is all there is of the story. But ever since I have carried that slipper with me. It was in my pocket tonight as I traversed the upper halls of your house, seeking the ghost of that British soldier, and I had just discovered my loss when I heard you calling. In returning if you have conferred upon me the greatest imaginable favor, I have faith that some time, somewhere, I shall find the owner of that slipper. Would you not tute from its diminutive size and the fine, suggestive delicacy of its outlines, that the owner is a person of aristocratic lineage and of breeding? I will confess that nothing is nearer my heart than the hope that one day I shall meet the young lady—I am sure she must be young—who wore that slipper and dropped it, as it seemed, from the clouds at my feet there to sedate Beacon street, that most solemn of residential sanctuaries."

"Mr. Ames," began Miss Hollister instantly, with an assumed severity that her smile belied. "I cannot recall that my niece Hezekiah ever visited in Beacon street, yet I dare say that if she had done so and a young man of your pleasing appearance had passed beneath her window one of her slippers might very easily have become detached from Hezekiah's foot and fall on with a nice calculation directly in front of you. But now, Mr. Ames, will you kindly carry your candle into that trunk room?"

The foundations of the world shook as I remembered the conquest by which Hezekiah was excluded from the house and realized what her impending discovery would mean to Cecilia, her father and the wayward Hezekiah—tap But I was in for it—Miss Octavia in dictated by an imperious nod that I was to precede her into the trunk room, and I strode before her with my candle held high.

But the spirits of mystery were still abroad at Hopefield. The room was unoccupied save for the trunks. Hezekiah had vanished. Instead of sitting there to await the coming of her aunt, she had silently departed without leaving a trace. Miss Hollister glanced up at the trapdoor in the ceiling, and so did I. It was closed, but I did not doubt that Hezekiah had crawled through it and taken herself to the roof. Miss Octavia would probably order me at once to the battlements, but worse was to come.

"Mr. Ames," she said, "will you kindly lift the lid of that largest trunk?"

I had not thought of this, and I shuddered at the possibilities.

She indicated the trunk upon which Hezekiah had sat and alluded to a cracker not more than ten minutes before. Could it be possible that when I lifted the cover that golden head would be found beneath? My life has known no sadder moment than that in which I dug back the lid of that trunk. I averted my eyes in dread of the impending disclosure and held the candle close.

But the trunk was empty. Incredibly empty! My courage rose again, and I glanced at Miss Octavia triumphantly. I even jerked out the trays to allay any lingering suspicion. Why had I ever doubted Hezekiah? Who was she, the golden haired daughter of kings, to be caught in a trunk? She had slipped up the ladder while I talked to her aunt and was even now hiding on the roof, but it was not for me to make so treatable a suggestion. Miss Octavia might press the matter further if she liked, but I would not help her to trap Hezekiah.

Miss Hollister did not, to my surprise and relief, suggest an inspection of the roof. She nodded her head gravely and passed out into the hall.

"Mr. Ames, if I implied a moment ago that I doubted your story of the dropping of that tan pump from a Beacon street roof or window, I now tender you my sincerest apologies."

She put out her hand, smiling charmingly.

"Tray return to the occupations which were engaging you when I interrupted you. You have never stood higher in my regard than at this moment. Tomorrow you may tell me all you please of the ghost and the mysteries of this house, and I dare say we shall find the bones of that British soldier somewhere beneath the foundations. As for that trifling bit of leather you hold in your hand, it's rather passe for Beacon street. The next time you tell that story I suggest that you play your game of drop the slipper from a window of Rittenhouse square, Philadelphia."

Hezekiah on the roof was safe for a time. Miss Octavia's gentle rejection of my Beacon street anecdote and her intimation that Hezekiah had been an unbidden participant of the comedy of the ghost had been disquieting, and in my relief of her abandonment of the search I lolled on downstairs with my hostess. I wished to impress her with the idea that I was without urgent business. Hezekiah would, beyond doubt, amuse herself after her own fashion on the roof until I was ready to release her. As I had quietly locked the trunk room door and carried the key in my pocket I was reasonably sure of this. Humility is best acquired through tribulation, and as Hezekiah sat among the chimney crooks nursing one stockinged foot and waiting for me to turn up with her lost slipper, I would do her no harm to nibble the bitter fruit of repentance with another biscuit.

CHAPTER XVII.

Loss of the Silver Notebook.

THE memoranda of my adventures at Hopefield Manor fall under two general headings. On the one hand were the ghost and the library chimney, on the other the extraordinary gathering of Cecilia's suitors. As I followed at Miss Octavia's side she seemed to have dismissed the ghost and the fractious chimney from her mind. Her humor changed completely. As in the morning, when, unaccountably abandoning her habitual high down speech, she had asked me about Cecilia's silver notebook, she seemed troubled, and when we had reached the second floor she paused and lost herself in unwanted preoccupation.

"Let us sit here a moment," she said, indicating a long davenport in the broad hall. For the first time her manner betrayed weariness. She laid her hand quietly on my arm and looked at me fixedly. "Arnold," she said—"you will let me call you Arnold, won't you?" she added plaintively, and never in my life had I been so touched by anything so sweet and gentle and kind.

"Arnold, if an old woman like me should do a very foolish thing in following her own whims and then find that she had probably committed herself to a course likely to cause unhappiness, what would you advise her to do about it?"

"Miss Hollister," I answered, "if you trusted Providence this morning to send you a corps of servants when you had been most unfortunately scattered by ghosts or rumors of ghosts, why will you not continue to have confidence that your affairs will always be directed by agencies equally alert and beneficent?"

"I don't know the name, but I have found out a lot of things without being told, so tell me nothing! Remember that I have something quite remarkable, startling even, to show you tomorrow. I have even overcome, you know, the obstacle you placed in the way of my discoveries by sending in ahead of me this mbrating for the plans of the house."

I watched her narrowly, but she was in no wise disconcerted.

"Well," I turned them the moment

Hilda brought them back," she laughed. "I had faith in you, and I wanted you to manage it all for yourself. I rather guessed that you would go to Pepperton. That was when I still believed."

"But you must go on helleying. Makebellying is the main cornerstone and the keystone of the arch of the happy life."

"You are sure you are not mocking a foolish old woman?"

"You are the wisest woman I ever knew," I asserted, and my heart was in the words.

"I believe you have persuaded me, but Cecilia—"

"Leave it to me; trust me; lean upon me. I assure you that all will be well."

She bent her head and yielded herself to reverie for a moment. Then she sprang to her feet in that indescribably light, graceful way that erased at least fifty of her years from the reckoning and was herself again.

"Arnold Ames," she said, laughing a little but glowing up at me with unmistakable confidence and liking in her eyes, "we will go through with this to the end. And whether that slipper really fell at your feet in Beacon street or in the even less likely precincts of Rittenhouse square or under the windows of the Spanish embassy in Washington, I believe that you are my good knight and that you will see me safely through this singular adventure."

ANTRIM REPUBLICANS

Will Hold Their Sixth Annual Meeting and Banquet at Bellaire May 5th, 1913.

Arrangements are well under way for the sixth annual meeting and banquet of the Antrim County Republican club, to be held at Bellaire Thursday evening, May 5th, 1913. The speakers and program will be announced later, but the officers in charge wish to assure the club membership, republicans and patrons generally, that they expect to procure some of the best and most prominent republican speakers in the state, who will expound republicanism in an able and gentlemanly manner, and while this is a Republican club and banquet, we welcome our progressive brothers to join us, and especially all enrolled members of the club. The musical program and the service generally will be of the best, every effort will be made to hold the banquet to its high standard, and to make this the banner meeting in the existence of the club. Nothing will be overlooked to make it pleasant for all who attend, from the time they arrive until the last cigar is smoked.

The ladies of the Congregational church will serve a twenty-five cent supper in the dining room of the church on Friday evening, April 25, from 5:30 to 8 o'clock—Adv. 151

Teachers' Examination.

The regular examination for April will be held in the high school building in the city of Charlevoix on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 24, 25 and 26, beginning at 8:30 standard time.

Questions in reading will be based on Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Certificates for all grades will be issued from this examination. Paper will be furnished for applicants.

Applicants who expect to have their papers forwarded to other county examiners will write with pen. Others may use pen or pencil.

All applicants will please notice that this examination is held under the new law changing the date from June to April. J. H. Milford, Commissioner—Adv. 162

THEATRICAL

That Breach of Promise Case.

The Mock Court Trial to be given under the auspices of the ladies' aid society of Methodist Episcopal church, in Charlevoix Opera house on Tuesday evening, April 23rd, promises to be an event of unusual interest. Judging from newspaper reports of similar entertainment conducted by the present management it would seem to be one of the most amusing things now offered for public patronage.

It will be, in the first place, an exact reproduction of a court scene in methods and procedure, and on this account will be extremely interesting to ladies and others who have never attended a real trial.

Best of all will be the refined fun of the whole affair. With Hon. F. W. Mayne presiding over the court, Miss Anna Bogart appearing as the broken-hearted plaintiff, J. E. Redman as the defendant, Col. A. V. Newton of Worcester, Massachusetts, prosecuting the case, and brilliant array of court officers, witnesses and jurors, it is pretty certain we shall have all the comedy and reality of a court scene, and enough wholesome fun to last a whole year.

Indeed, it is predicted by those in position to know, that from the opening of the court until the close of the case, the audience will be kept keyed up to the point of convulsions by the unique proceedings.

Wit, pathos, eloquence, laughable local hits and vagaries will be drawn upon without stint to keep up the current of merriment.

As an entertainment of innocent fun, conducted with mock dignity and without the shade of offense to refined tastes, the Mock Court trial will be as mentioned above, an event of unusual interest.

The following are the rest of the participants:

Clerk, F. E. Slaght, Esq.; court officer, Captain Harrison Berdan; crier, Hon. Servetus A. Correll; witnesses, Miss Mildred Johnson, Mrs. William Scroggie, Dr. A. M. Wilkins, Peter Vandermade, Loren Hart, Jurors: James Gaikin, Louie Orlovski, L. S. See, O. D. Hammond, John Burns, A. J. Bridge, Hon. Harry Nichols, Andrew Ross, W. H. Miller, Alva Coulter, Captain O. E. Wilbur, Hon. William E. Hampton.

EXPECT DOUBLE MILEAGE

State Experts to Pay Reward on Thousand Miles of Good Roads.

State Highway Commissioner Ely has added two new engineers to his department in order to meet the growth in state road building induced throughout Michigan this spring as a result of the adoption of the county road system by eight counties.

Road making in Michigan during the approaching summer is expected to double the new road mileage of past years. The state highway department is preparing to receive a double amount of business.

Neilson, formerly a United States engineer in the Philippines, and K. J. Sawyer of Menominee county, are the new members of the commissioner's engineering corps.

"We look for great development in road building this season," declared Ely. "In other years state engineers have not supervised the building of more than 150 miles of new road annually, but we look for double that mileage in 1913."

General adoption of the county road system, which has now been accepted by 54 counties, means the opening of a new era in state highway building, according to Commissioner Ely. He expects state road building to be unit beneficent at the rate of 100 or more miles per a double amount of business.

Remarkable Success of These Talented Physicians in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases.

Offer Their Services Free of Charge for the Last Time.

The United Doctors, licensed by the state of Michigan, for the treatment of diseases and all nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free, making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of medicine. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect. These doctors are considered by many former patients among America's leading stomach and nerve specialists and are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard indeed to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys or bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bedwetting, leg ulcers, weak lungs and those afflicted with long-standing, deep-seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family physician, should not fail to call. According to their system, no more operations for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, gonorrhea, piles, etc. By their method these diseases are treated without operation or hypodermic injection.

They were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife, with blood and with all pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

If you have kidney and bladder troubles bring a two ounce bottle of your urine for chemical analysis and microscopic examination.

Deafness often has been cured in sixty days.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others may have told you, no matter what other physicians it will be to your advantage to see them at once. Have it forever settled in your mind. If your case is incurable they will give you such advice as may relieve and stay the disease. Do not put off this duty you owe yourself or friends or relatives who are suffering because of your sickness, as a visit at this time may help you.

Worn out and run-down men or women, no matter what your ailment, consult them upon this visit. It costs you nothing.

Remember, this last free offer is for this visit only.

The Siege of The Seven Suitsors

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

And I, Arnold Ames, but lately a student of chemistry, bent and blessed Miss Octavia's hand.

She led the way to the library, where I thought it well to appear for a moment, and I was heartily glad that I did so. It was joy enough for any man that he should have earned such glances of interest and suspicion as the suitors bent upon me. Then they were, some standing, some seated, about Cecilia. I bowed low from the door, feeling that to offer my hand to these gentlemen in their present temper would be too severe a strain upon their manners. As Miss Octavia appeared several of them advanced courteously and engaged her in conversation. She found a seat and called the others to her on the plea that she wished to ask them their opinion touching some matter. I believe it was a late rumor that Andrea, who had gone ballooning to discover the Hyperboreans, had been heard of somewhere.

Cecilia appeared distraught, and I wondered what new turn her affairs had Bent and Kissed Miss Octavia's Hand. taken. She rose as I crossed the room, and from her manner I judged that she welcomed this chance of addressing me.

"You have scorned the library tonight. Has there been trouble?" Is Aunt Octavia alarmed about anything?

Cecilia was a beautiful, charming woman of the world, but I felt her spell less tonight. It may be that the presence of Hezekiah's slipper in my inside coat pocket, pressing rather insistently against my ribs, acted as a countercharm.

"You are in difficulty, Miss Cecilia," I said. "Please tell me in what way I may serve you."

"I don't know why I should appeal to you."

"No reason is necessary. I have told you before that you need only to command me. We may be interrupted at any moment. Pray go on."

"I have lost an article of the greatest value to me. It has been taken from my room."

For a moment only I read distrust and suspicion in her eyes as it occurred to her that I had access to every part of the house, but my manner seemed to restore her confidence. And she could not have forgotten that her own father had met her secretly on the roof of a house that was denied him and that I was perfectly cognizant of the fact.

"I am sure you can be of assistance," she said. "There's something behind this ghost story. Some one has been in and about the house. You believe that?"

"Yes. There has really been a sort of ghost, you know."

She shrugged her shoulders. Cecilia had no patience with ghosts, and we were losing time. My conversation with Cecilia was annoying Wiggins, as was plain from his nervousness.

"I went to my room for a moment while Aunt Octavia was above, with you, I suppose, just after the chimney gave another of its strange demonstrations. I remembered that I had left my little silver bound book that I usually carry with me, on my dressing room table. It contains a memorandum of great importance to me. It positively cannot be duplicated. I am sure it was there when I came down to dinner. But it was not on my dressing table or anywhere to be found."

"You may be mistaken as to where you left it. You would not be absolutely positive that you left it on the dressing table?"

"There is not the slightest question about it. I had been looking at it just before dinner. I had sent you a note, you know, immediately after you came back and hurried down to see you."

"Yes; I recall that. You were in the library when I came down. And I think I remember having seen the little trinket—slightly smaller than a card-case, silver backed and only a few leaves. You had it in your hand the other night when I came in after Mr. Hume had left."

She flushed slightly at this, but readily acquiesced in my description. Miss Octavia's inquiry as to whether I had seen the book came back to me and no less clearly her withdrawal of her question almost the moment she had spoken it.

I felt the sudden impingement of Hezekiah's slipper upon my own conscience, if I may so state the matter. Hezekiah, playing ghost, had confessed to me that she had visited Cecilia's room. Hezekiah, amusing herself with the library chimney and frightening the servants by stealing into the forbidden house through the coalhole, was a culprit to be scolded and forgiven.

But what of Hezekiah's mischievous fishing an article of real value to her sister? I did not like this turn of affairs. I must get back to the room and Hezekiah and compel her to return the silver book. Only by tactics, managing this could I serve well as the members of the house of Hollister. But first I must leave Cecilia with a tranquil mind.

"I thank you for confiding this matter to me, Miss Hollister. Please do not attach suspicion to any one until I have seen you again."

"But if you should be unable to recover it?"

"I assure you that the book is not lost. It has been mislaid, that's all. I shall return it to you at breakfast. I give you my word."

"Do you really mean it?" she faltered. "Please keep this from Aunt Octavia! I can't tell you how important it is that she be kept in ignorance of my loss. The consequences, if she knew, might be very distressing."

Miss Octavia was carrying the lively little John Stewart Dick away to the billiard room. He glared at me murderously as he trailed glumly after the lady of the manor. The others were crowding about Cecilia again, and I yielded to them willingly. As I sauntered toward the door Ormsby detained me a moment. His manner was arrogant and he hissed rather than spoke.

"I'm directed to command your presence at the Prescott Arms tomorrow at 12 o'clock. The business is important."

"I regret, my dear brother, that I shall be unable to sit with you at that hour in committee of the whole, and for two reasons. The first is that I am paired with Lord Arrowood. You refused to take him into your base compact and allowed him to be thrown out of the inn for not paying his bill. The act was deficient in generosity and gallantry."

"Then I suppose you would think it a fine thing for such a pauper to marry a woman like that—like that, I say?" and he jerked his head toward Cecilia.

"I consider a lord of Arrowood as good as the proprietor of a kiltling mill any day. If you press me for an opinion," I replied amiably.

"And this from a chimney sweep?" he sneered.

"You flatter me, my dear sir. I've renounced soot and become a gentleman adventurer merely to prevent a type that long humiliated popular fiction from becoming extinct. I advise you to fill the void existing in the heavy villain class. Believe me, your talents would carry you far. Study Dunbar and forget the wool market and you will lead a happier life. My second reason for declining to meet you at the Arms at 12 tomorrow is merely that the hour is inconvenient. I assume that you mean to urge lunch-coup-up-me-and-I never eat before 1. My doctor has warned me to avoid early luncheons if I would preserve my figure, of which you may well believe me justly proud."

"You're a coward—that's all there is to that. I dare you to come!"

"Well, as I think of it, I'd rather be dared than invited. If I find it quite convenient I shall drop in. But you needn't keep the waffles hot for me. Good evening."

Rheumatism as a result of kidney trouble, stiff and aching joints, backache and sore kidneys will all yield to the use of Foley Kidney Pills. They are tonic in action, quick in results, curative always. W. S. Skelton, Stanley, Ind., "I would not take $1000 for the relief from kidney trouble I received from one single box of Foley Kidney Pills." Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

Pinfeathers.

Some good poultry men think by feeding sitting hens in the morning they are more apt to remain contented on their nests all day.

Roopy fowls should be separated from the rest of the flock and kept where they are not likely to contaminate the soil or spread the disease.

There is nothing so injurious to chickens, turkeys, ducks, geese and pigeons as exposure to dampness. By that is not meant the occasional exposure to the rain, but living continually in damp places.

"One cannot feed hens barely enough to keep them alive and then expect eggs from them. It has also been proved that some kinds of foods will produce more eggs than other kinds. Supply the elements requisite to the growing of feathers, bone or frame, flesh, a certain amount of fat (needful to conserve the animal heat)—and a surplus to be turned into eggs."

Heavy Materials For Auto Roads. The excessive cost of Keoplag macadam roads in repair has led the commissioners in some counties in Pennsylvania to contract for the construction of roads with hard surfaced materials.

It is claimed that the swift running automobiles suck up the finer material and scatter them to the four winds in a short time actually blow the road away.

Prosperity Follows Good Roads. You show me any community in this or any other state where there are good roads, said a speaker at a good roads convention, and I will show you a community where there are no paint-finished buildings or tottering lean-tos, a community where there is the air of prosperity, thrift and progress.

No matter how long you suffered, or what other remedies have failed to cure, Foley Kidney Pills will surely help you. They are genuinely tonic, strengthening and curative, build up the kidneys and restore their regular action. John Velbert, Foster, Cal., says: "I suffered many years with kidney trouble and could not get relief until I tried Foley Kidney Pills, which cured my complaint. I am Druggist."

Clearing Sale of New and Second Hand FURNITURE

We are overstocked and must dispose of a large portion of our goods at once. To do this we are going to mark these household necessities at about one-half of their former regular price. The sale will start

Thursday, April 24 and Ends Saturday, May 3

In cutting these regular prices to the extremely low figure we are selling the goods, allowing us a very small margin on our investment, we must sell everything for strictly cash. This is the time of the year when you will need many new pieces of furniture in the house, and this sale will be the place to buy them at money-saving prices. Remember the dates—come to the sale—and keep in mind that the price we sell these goods for means a cash deal. Below we list a few of the bargains that greet you.

Oak dressers, former price $13.50, sale price	$11.19	Model steel range, 6 lid, with reservoir former price $20.00, sale price	$15.00

Traverse county, $18,000 and White-water township, Grand Traverse county, $24,000 for road improvements. They are all on the Chicago and Mackinaw City road, and certainly there can be no more desirable stretch of seventy miles of level road than that along the lake shore from Traverse City to Petoskey, known as the lower road, consisting, as it does, of the best material from which to make a road. There is not a township along that line that cannot afford to build itself just as well as those mentioned above have.

Quality Arbor.

Quality Arbor A. O. O. G. met at Marion town hall Saturday evening April 12 with an attendance of twenty-three members and one visitor.

One new member was initiated into the order.

The lecture hour consisted of recitations, songs, music, a pantomime.

After partaking of a pot luck supper the members dispersed to meet again in two weeks.

Mass Meeting.

Mr. Walter D. Howell, field secretary of the Michigan Christian Endeavor union, will be in Charlevoix next Thursday at four o'clock p. m. He will meet the officers and members at the Congregational church for a workers' conference. In the evening a young people's mass meeting will be held, to which everybody, without regard to age, is cordially invited. Mr. Howell comes highly recommended and an interesting and profitable conference is anticipated.

STEAMER LOST

The Uganda, Sank by the ice in the Straits of Mackinac Sunday Night.

The steamer Uganda was sunk by the ice in the Straits of Mackinac Sunday night. Captain Crockett of the Uganda reports that he cleared from Milwaukee with 1,000 barrels of corn for Buffalo and everything went well until they got in the heaviest part of the ice off White Shoals, which cut through the planking and the boat started to leak. Distress signals brought the Donaldson, which took off the crew of twenty-two men.

After backing away the Uganda started to settle and finally sank stern first about five miles east of White Shoal lightship. When the Uganda went down the forward part of the boat was blown off. It was owned by Edward Mehl, of Erie, Pa., and was insured. The Uganda was a wooden vessel, 201 feet in length and was built in 1892.

LONG THOUGHT DEAD

Rev. C. E. Taggart Rewarded After Long Search For Old College Chum.

For thirty years the words "address unknown" has followed the name of George V. Popoff in the bulletins giving the address of graduates of Olivet college and he has long been thought to have been dead.

Rev. C. E. Taggart of this city, who was a room mate and classmate of Popoff has desperately endeavored to find some trace of his old chum. At last his search has been rewarded, Mr. Taggart having received a letter from Popoff, who is now a prominent citizen of Pleven, Bulgaria.

Dayton Floods in Moving Pictures.

Not since the war of 1861 have the people of this country been so overwhelmed and grief stricken as at the present time. The year 1913 will go down in history. The property loss will run into the hundreds of millions of dollars, probably more than the losses of the San Francisco fire, the Johnstown flood or the Titanic disaster. Whole families are wiped out of existence. Babies wrenched from the arms of their mothers by the angry growling waves, never to return. Men, women and children clinging to driftwood tops and limbs of trees, drop to a watery grave after energy gives way. Big skyscrapers tumble and fall as the mad torrents sweep by. Tongue is inadequate to describe it. See it at the Majestic theatre, Friday night, April 25.

Child Badly Burned.

Monday evening while playing around a bon fire, where his parents had been cleaning the yard, the 17 month's old son of Robert Russell fell into the coals. His left hand was badly burned, being almost literally cooked, while he also suffered severe burns on the right hand, knee and face.

Dr. Wilkinson was called and the little fellow is getting along as well as could be expected.

Probate Court Matters.

April 14, Charles Zeitler, administrator of the estate of John Newman, files final account.

Charles C. Croy, age 15, of Eveline township, was sent to the industrial school at Lansing until seventeen years old. He was charged with truancy and unlawfully and feloniously taking a bicycle.

MEN'S BIBLE CLASS

Mr. Coad Gave a Very Forceful Address Last Sunday at Carnegie Library.

J. E. Coad, president of the Needham college at Traverse City, Michigan, addressed the class Sunday on behalf of the Laymen's International Missionary movement. A convention is to be held at Traverse City commencing the 27th of April. Monday the 28th a banquet is to be held in the evening at which it is expected that from five hundred to seven hundred will sit down. Addresses are to be made by some of the most prominent speakers along this line in the United States.

Mr. Coad's address was a very forceful presentation of the cause of foreign missions and a very lucid exposition of the particular movement in which he is interested. He made a very pleasant effect and the class will be glad to welcome him back whenever he can find it convenient to again address them.

Next Sunday D. C. Northton will tell the class something of his experience in China.

Colored Jubilee Singers.

The famous company of Colored Jubilee Singers, students from the Southern Normal and Industrial College, Brewster, Alabama, will give an entertainment at the Baptist church on Friday evening April 25th. The company consist of eight cultured vocalists who will render many of the "Plantation melodies" characteristic of the colored race. No admission will be charged at the door but a free will offering will be used in carrying on the work of the college.

DAIRY EXHIBITS GREATEST EVER

Michigan State Fair Will Have Mammoth Exhibition.

HAS EDUCATIONAL FEATURES

Supt. Marston Arranges for Interesting Demonstrations and Lectures by Experts—How to Stop Leaks Through Advanced Management.

"City folks, and even some farmers, little realize how prominent the cow is in producing farm wealth," said T. E. Marston, superintendent of the Dairy Department of the Michigan State Fair.

"Statistics compiled by Sec. Wilson of the United States Department of Agriculture show that in 1912, dairy yield was almost staggering in its largeness," continued Mr. Marston.

"For instance the dairy yield was just twice as valuable as the oat crop, equal to the hay crop, while the entire wheat for 1912 was only worth three-quarters as much as was the dairy wealth. Sec. Wilson estimated the country's wealth in this respect in 1912 was $530,000,000.

"We are already sure of filling the space allotted to our department at the fair and I have been attempting to get General Manager Dickinson to apportion off some additional room for the dairy exhibit. Manager Dickinson fully appreciates the significance attached to this department and will do everything possible to secure more comprehensive quarters.

Will Demonstrate.

"We propose to go into the demonstration work this year as extensively as possible. It isn't theory the farmer wants, but actual demonstration of the results of research and investigation. We will endeavor to show the dairyman the results of feeding, breeding and caring in the composition of the milk. How pasteurized cream will conserve butter and make it more healthful to the consumer. By this, and other methods, we hope to educate the consumer to a keener appreciation of advanced dairying and be willing to pay the additional cost when he sees the results.

"We will have some investigations and exhibitions of European cheese making. How the foreigners get such fine results. For years Americans have been under the impression that the best European produced cheeses cannot be made in America successfully. This is merely an opinion and not a fact. We will have exhibitions of all sorts of choice cheeses at the Michigan State Fair this year that will compare with anything of their kind in the world.

"Experts in the employ of the United States Agricultural stations throughout the country estimate that no less than $8,000,000 was tossed away last year as the direct result of mismanagement of creameries. Proved methods and systems of management will be shown at the fair. This will tend to improve quality as well as the quantity of the output.

"In conclusion I might say that while past dairy exhibits at the Michigan State Fair have been far from ordinary, the 1913 exhibition will be a classic in every detail."

SUPERINTENDENT DEVDE STAYS

Three Changes Are Made in Staff of High School.

Charlevoix Schools Rank Among the Highest in the State—Full List of Teachers.

Below we are able to give the list of teachers secured for the Charlevoix public schools for next season. Very few changes are made, the list, in the main, being the same as last year. Three changes are made in the High School staff, new teachers being secured in place of Mr. Carpenter, and the Misses Swigart and Brown, who have all made records as successful teachers. It will be good news that Superintendent DeVoe will remain with us another year as during his many years of service with our schools he has brought them up to a higher degree of efficiency each year. Principal Craig will also be welcomed back with pleasure. The complete list, together with the school or college from which they are graduates, follows:

I. M. DeVoe, superintendent. Office hours $300-$45 a. m., 3:30-4:00 p. m.—Algebra I-1000045.

DEATH OF FORMER PASTOR
Reverend George S. Barnes died at his home in Petoskey Thursday.

George S. Barnes, a former pastor of the Methodist church in this city, died at his home in Petoskey, Thursday night, of jaundice.

Mr. Barnes was a chaplain in the civil war and since that time, occupied Methodist pulpits at Ionia, Quincy, Greenville, Niles, Sturgis, St. Joseph, Shelby, Reading, White Pigeon, Kalkaska, Jackson, Harbor Springs and this city, retiring twenty years ago, since which time he has made his home in Petoskey.

SEMI-ANNUAL ELECTION

Of Officers of Men's Bible Class Will Take Place Next Sunday.

Next Sunday is the semi-annual election of officers at which time also the matter of deciding the hour when the class will meet will come up. Messrs Earl Young and Donald Campbell will relate their experiences on their trip to the Panama Canal and the Islands of the Caribbean Sea.

Last Sunday D. C. Nettleton gave the class a very instructive and interesting talk on his experience in Old Mexico.

The class also voted to call a mass meeting of the electors of the city at the Court House Friday evening, May 3, at 7:30 p. m. to consider charter changes, especially the proposition of a commission form of government for Charlevoix.

ATTEMPTED ABDUCTION

Of Four Year Old Child at Petoskey Last Sunday Afternoon.

Sunday afternoon, the abduction of a four year old child was attempted in Petoskey.

The child was Marjorie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ingalls. The identity of the kidnapper is unknown except that he appeared to be an Indian or half-breed.

The child was rescued by William Judd, the would-be kidnapper escaping into the woods. At last a blood hound was secured and a chase was started toward Bay Shore where the trail was lost.

EIGHT FLIERS HAVE ENTERED

In the International Great Lakes Flying Boat Cruise.

Twenty Thousand Dollars in Prizes Will be Awarded the Winners.

Eight flying boats to be piloted by the most famous aviators in the country, have been nominated to participate in the International Great Lakes Flying Boat Cruise which starts from Chicago on July 8 and finishes at Detroit a few days later.

Following are the pilots who are to handle the air-boats.
Thomas Benoist, Hing Robinson, Tony Jaanus, Frank Harrison, C. C. Witmer, Weldoo B. Cook, Max L. Lie, F. B. R. Verplank, Glenn Curtiss will nominate another pilot, within a week and six other starters are assured. Seven makes of craft are entered.

This cruise is the first event of the kind ever scheduled and promises to be far more pretentious than the air and water craft carnival now in progress at Monte Carlo.

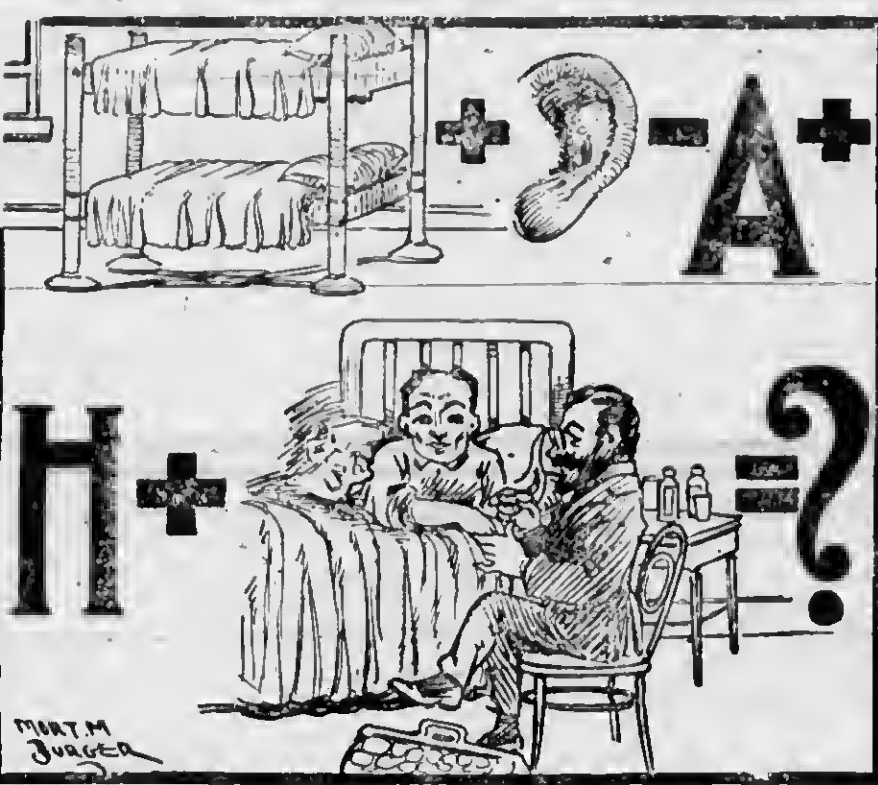

The flying boat is the latest type of hydro-aeroplane, a seaworthy boat replacing the frail pontoons which are impracticable in rough water. The new craft is capable of a speed of 55 or 60 miles an hour in the water and 65 to 80 miles an hour in the air. Two or three passengers may be carried, comfort during the trip being provided by a glass wind shield and upholstered seating compartment.

The fortunate contestant will be awarded prizes approximating $20,000 and the event will be under the rules of the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

Elaborate preparations are being made by different cities and resorts along the route for the reception and entertainment of the fliers. A lake steamer will follow the cruise and provide transportation and living accommodations for enthusiasts and officials.

ARBOR AND BIRD DAY

Governor Ferris Issues the Annual Proclamation Fixing Date.

Requests That Day be Generally Observed by Schools and Colleges.

The tremendous commercial value of forests is fast coming to be appreciated. Effort is being made throughout the United States to conserve what remains and so far as possible reforest large tracts of territory. Trees have a value other than commercial. They are friends to man and beast. Without friends man is a forlorn creature. Every choice tree that is planted not only blesses this generation, but graciously blesses coming generations.

Birds too have an economic value in the distribution of plant life and in the destruction of harmful insects. They also have a higher value. Literature abounds in allusions to birds, their songs, food, flight, migrations, plumage and habit. On account of their beauty countless numbers of our winged friends have been killed to meet the ruthless demands of fashion. May the fathers and mothers and their children of today use their best efforts to preserve and perpetuate the lives of our useful and beautiful birds. Love for birds is akin to love for man.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the state of Michigan, do hereby designate Friday, May 9th, A. D. 1913, as Arbor and Bird Day, and do request that this day be observed by all schools, public and private, and other educational institutions by the planting of trees for beautifying school grounds and parks, and by conducting suitable exercises for promoting the protection of trees and birds.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred thirteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-seventh.

Woodbridge N. Ferris.
By the Governor:
Frederick C. Martindale,
Secretary of State.

NEARLY HALF A CENTURY

Had Mrs. Marion E. Johnson Been a Resident of This City.

Passed Away at the Home of Her Daughter Wednesday Evening.

Mrs. Marion E. Johnson died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. R. Foley of Petoskey, Wednesday evening, April 23, after an illness of six months. Mrs. Johnson had been a resident of this city and vicinity for 47 years. About seven weeks ago she went to Petoskey to live with her daughter, while taking medical treatment, but her condition finally grew worse.

Mrs. Marion E. Boss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Boss, was born in Norwalk, Ohio, June 1, 1836. When 21 years of age she was married to John A. Johnson at Nashville, Tennessee. Forty-seven years ago they came to Northern Michigan, settling in this city, where they have since resided.

Mrs. Johnson is survived by her husband and three children, Mrs. John R. Foley of Petoskey, T. L. Johnson of Madison, Wisconsin, and Mrs. A. W. Lynde of this city, a brother, W. A. Boss of Ellsworth and a sister, Mrs. A. M. Wisley of Olivet.

Brief funeral services were held Friday afternoon from the family residence, Rev. L. H. Manning officiating, and the body was brought to this city where funeral services were held from the home Saturday afternoon. Rev. Quinton Walker officiating. Burial at Brookside.

Mrs. Johnson had been an earnest worker in the Methodist church nearly all her life and was a woman who will long be remembered for her many acts of kindness.

AROUND THE WORLD.

John Mitchell Arrives Home Saturday After Long Journey.

John Mitchell returned home Saturday from his long journey around the world.

It will be remembered that Mr. Mitchell left here last December for Australia where he was called by the illness of a brother-in-law that wished to return to his boyhood home in Scotland. Mr. Mitchell reports that he had a fine trip, the weather being fine most of the time; that he had a nice visit in his old home in Scotland; that his brother-in-law arrived home much improved in health, but he is glad once more to be on American soil.

SHAKESPEARE CLUB

Celebrated Anniversary of Shakespeare's Birth Wednesday Evening.

The Shakespeare Study club celebrated the anniversary of Shakespeare's birth in a pleasing way. At 8 o'clock Wednesday evening April 23rd at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Bridge, in the presence of members of the club and their husbands, an impersonation of The Taming of the Shrew, was given in costume.

The cast of characters were as follows: Petruchio, Mrs. R. B. Armstrong; Gremio, Mrs. W. E. Hampton; Hortensio, Mrs. A. F. Bridge; Baptista, Mrs. George Priest; Katherine, the Shrew, Mrs. R. W. Paddock. After the play, light refreshments were served and all were as merry as first good company and good welcome could make good people.

Tuesday, April 23, the club met at the home of the president, Mrs. J. L. Crane, for the last meeting of the year.

Two selections from Browning, "Saul" and "Andrea Del Sarto" are the lesson.

This meeting closed the eighth year of the Shakespeare Study club.

Buried by Cave in.

This forenoon while working on the Meach street sewer Earl Balch was buried by a cave in, it taking nearly three hours to dig him out. Dr. Montague, who was called in for him, is of the opinion that unless he is injured internally he will be none the worse for his experience.

PETOSKEY WINS FIRST GAME

Defeats Charlevoix High School in Game Played Last Saturday.

By a Score of Fourteen to Seven—The Game Was One-sided But Interesting.

Charlevoix lost to Petoskey in the first base ball game of the season played at Petoskey Saturday.

Reed opened the game in the pitcher's box for Petoskey, and after three runs were scored on him in the second inning, he was replaced by Talladay, who pitched a steady game. Smith, Henkel, Gibson and Talladay batted well for Petoskey, while Durance, Taylor and Scroggie for Charlevoix. Crawford for Petoskey and Taylor and Scroggie for Charlevoix, made star plays in the field. A good attendance witnessed the game.

BAD FIRE AT PETOSKEY

Resulted in Loss of Fifteen Thousand Dollars—Fully Insured.

Fire, which according to the best belief had been smoldering since Friday afternoon, broke out early Saturday morning in the oil room, in the Bump & McCabe hardware at Petoskey, the cause being spontaneous combustion and resulted in a fire loss of about fifteen thousand dollars, fully covered by insurance distributed as follows:

Bump & McCabe, stock, $9,000, fire, water and smoke.
Building, owned by Rosenthal, $3,000, fire.
Fred Glass Drug Co., stock, $2,500, smoke.

Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, property, $100.
Drs. Gray and Pedden about $75.

APPORTIONMENT BILL PASSED

New District is Formed Out of Portion of Detroit.

FORDNEY AND LINDQUIST

Are Both Placed in the Same Congressional District.

Charlevoix Remains in the Eleventh But Takes in a Portion of Upper Peninsula—Several Candidates Will be in Field.

During the last days of the legislative session the new congressional reapportionment bill was passed. Charlevoix remains the same in number but is in an entirely new district. Already Senator Scott and Wood are in the race for the Republican nomination, while the friends of our own Bill Pearson are urging him to get into the game.

The county of Montcalm, to which almost every district in the state strenuously objected because of its advertising congressman, Francis Lindquist, was put in with the Eighth and was accepted, together with the county of Ionia—that district because it helped give the other counties of the district the balance of power to offset Saginaw's majority. This was the statement made by Representative Newell Smith in the house.

Representative Taylor of Kent, Bricker of Ionia and McBride of Ottawa registered strenuous opposition to the arrangement by which the Fifth district is limited to Ottawa and Kent. McBride wanted Ottawa separated from Kent and Taylor, Democrat, wanted Ionia and Barry with Kent instead of Ottawa. Bricker objected to putting his county with Saginaw and Montcalm in the Eighth.

Glasner of Barry objected. He wanted to work Barry into the Fifth, so as to give the Democrats a better chance to control. No other serious objection was made in the house.

Some of the upper peninsula members didn't like the arrangement by which the lower peninsula gained the balance of power in the Eleventh. But they confined themselves to voting against concurring in the senate's amendments. The congressional districts as they will be under the new law are:

First—Third, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, Eleventh, Thirteenth, Sixteenth wards of city of Detroit.

Second—Jackson, Monroe, Lena, wee, Washtenaw and two townships in Wayne and the city of Wyandotte.

Third—Eaton, Calhoun, Kalamazoo, Branch, Hillsdale.

Fourth—Barry, Allegan, Van Buren, Berrien, Cass, St. Joseph.

Fifth—Kent and Ottawa.

Sixth—Ingham, Livingston, Genesee, Oakland and nine townships in Wayne county.

Seventh—Huron, Tuscola, Sanilac, Lapeer, St. Clair, Macomb.

Eighth—Gratiot, Saginaw, Clinton, Shiawassee, Ionia, Montcalm.

Ninth—Leelanau, Benzie, Grand Traverse, Manistee, Wexford, Mason, Lake, Oceana, Newaygo, Muskegon, Missaukee.

Tenth—Crawford, Oscoda, Alcona, Roscommon, Ogemaw, Isco, Oceola, Clare, Gladwin, Arenac, Mecosta, Isabella, Midland and Bay.

Eleventh—Alger, Delta, Neomi, nee, Schoolcraft, Litch, Mackinac, Chippewa, Emmet, Cheboygan, Presque Isle, Charlevoix, Antrim, Osego, Montmorency, Alpena, Kalkaska.

Twelfth—Keweenaw, Houghton, Ontonagon, Gogebic, Baraga, Iron, Marquette and Dickinson.

Thirteenth—Second, Fourth, Sixth, Eighth, Tenth, Twelfth, Fourteenth, Sixteenth and Eighteenth wards of city of Detroit.

NEW TYPES OF SCHOOL MAPS

Are Now Issued by the United States Geological Survey.

Will be Sold to All Applicants at a Purely Nominal Price.

For teaching the geography of the United States in the public schools and colleges a strong effort is being made by the United States Geological Survey to foster the use of the topographic maps. These maps contain so many details of local interest, showing even the school houses and farm houses as well as every wagon road, with which of course the school children are familiar, that it is said to be an easy matter for teachers to enlist the interest of the pupils in this new type of school map. From an understanding of the particular maps representing their own localities it is but a succession of short steps to lead the pupils to an appreciation of the different types of country portrayed on maps of other sections of the United States. Most of the standard atlas sheets of the geological survey of recent issue are printed on the scale of 1 mile to 1 inch, a scale which shows the physical features of the country in very interesting detail.

With these maps the pupils can determine the altitude of their homes and the steepness of hills and mountains, estimate the grade of wagon roads, work out simple engineering problems such as the drainage of swamps, select dam sites for the construction of reservoirs to supply water to imaginary towns or for irrigation, lay out trolley or railroad lines or canals along the most feasible routes, establish lookouts and signal stations on high points for the control of forest fires, and plan many other similar activities.

The Geological Survey has published 2,200 topographic atlas sheets covering about 10 per cent of the United States, and on receipt of $3 from any teacher it will supply 50 different maps selected with reference to the particular requirements of the class it is proposed to instruct in this new kind of geographical study. This selection will include, besides the map covering the area where the school is situated, providing such a map is published, other maps showing all the physiographic forms to be found in the United States—coastal areas, hilly country, high and precipitous mountain country, swampy areas, regions of innumerable lakes, areas showing dense forests, areas with woodlands interspersed with many streams, lakes, and other natural features.

If less than fifty maps are desired, a special selection of a less number will be made on request and furnished at the retail rate of 10 cents a copy. Most of these maps, each of which on the 1-mile scale covers about 25 square miles, or 15,000 acres, have been made at a cost for surveying and engraving of $3.50 to $5.00 each, and the wholesale price of 6 cents apiece covers only about the cost of paper and printing. If the areas were surveyed and the maps published by a commercial concern, these maps would need to be sold for not less than $2 to $3 each. The Survey also sells an excellent wall map about 1 by 6 feet, unmounted in three sections, for 10 cents. This may be included in any wholesale order as part of the $3. Applications and remittances should be made to the Director of the United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C., who will promptly fill all orders.

There is no case on record of a cough, cold or influenza developing into bronchitis, pneumonia or consumption after Foley's Honey and Tar Compound has been taken. The genuine is in a yellow package. Refuse substitutes. Ivy Drug Store. —Adv.

CURBS SHIPMENT OF LIQUOR

Anti-Saloon League Head Praises the Pray Bill.

Says it Will Stamp Out Blind Pigs in Michigan—Other Features of Bill.

"The most important piece of legislation enacted on behalf of the prohibition forces passed the Michigan senate yesterday in the form of the Pray bill," says a statement issued Saturday morning by Superintendent J. Francis Barile of the Michigan Anti-Saloon league from his office in the Chamber of Commerce building.

"It provides that shipment of liquors to, or receipt or possession by, any person, not a druggist in 'dry' territory, who holds a U. S. internal revenue license, shall be prohibited. It further provides for certain information on the outside of every package of liquor shipped into 'dry' territory. This is in harmony with the Wilson law. It also provides that a record of all the information required shall be kept in every freight and express office in 'dry' territory, where the liquor is received. It prohibits the keeping of liquor in any place in 'dry' territory, except a private residence, drug store, or place where it is used for medicinal, chemical, mechanical, scientific or sacramental purposes—closing with a penal provision. It applies to 'dry' towns as well as 'dry' counties."

HELP TEACHERS

Many Things Being Done to Make Agriculture in Schools Efficient.

Progressive rural teachers, despite their lack of preparation in the subject, are finding that they can make the study of agriculture interesting and efficient for their eighth graders by taking advantage of the many aids which are offered them free. The Department of Public Instruction at Lansing sends helpful bulletins free upon application while the Michigan Agricultural College and the National Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., stands ready to furnish the teachers with a large amount of excellent material.

The farm experts, who are being employed in so many sections of the state, also stand ready to help the teachers with personal advice and assistance. Various farm papers are offering practical work and experiments while in a number of communities, progressive farmers are actively assisting in the work at the request of the teachers. Some teachers report that students assist them largely with the work, different ones being well versed in certain lines so that the pupils teach others and co-operate with the teacher.

CHAPTER XVIII. Jack o' Lantern.

I HURRIED back to the trunk room and had soon gained the roof. To my disappointment and chagrin my young lady of the single slipper was nowhere in sight. I found, however, lying near the library chimney a trunk tray that required no explanation. With this Hezekiah had blacked the dye, and I smiled as I pictured her stooping to reach the chimney crock and dropping the tray against the door. How gleefully she must have chuckled as she waited for the dye to fill and send the smoke eddying back into the library, to the discomfiture of her aunt and sister and the suitors, gathered about the hearth. The spirit of mischief never whispered into a prettier ear a trick better calculated to cause confusion.

I had thought Hezekiah scarce when I locked the trunk room door, but I had not counted upon the versatility and resourcefulness of that young person. I dropped to the second roof level and inspected the down spouts, but it was incredible that she had sought the earth by this means. I swung myself to a third level and after much groping for my bearings decided that an athletic girl of Hezekiah's venture some disposition might. If she set no great store by her neck, chamber off the kitchen roof by means of a tall, maple whose branches now raspingly called attention to their slight contact with the house.

As the moon cruised into a patch of clear sky something white fluttered from a maple limb, and I bent and snatched it free. I took counsel of a match behind the kitchen chimney and found that it was a handkerchief that had been knotted to the tip of the bough. No one but Hezekiah would have thought of marking her trail in this fashion. I held it to my face, and that faint perfume that had been a mystifying accompaniment of the passing of the mansion ghost became nothing more unreal than the erris in Hezekiah's handkerchief case. The wind whipped the lid of linen spitefully in my hands. I reasoned that if Hezekiah, the inexplicable, had not meant for me to know the manner of her exit she need not have left this plain hint behind, but the swaying maple bough did not tempt me. I hurried back across the roof to secure the trunk tray, resolved to dispose of it, seek the open and find the errand Hezekiah if she still lingered in the neighborhood.

I looked off across the windy landscape before descending, and as my eyes ranged the dark I caught the glimmer of a light as of a lantern borne in the hand in the meadow beyond the garden. It paused and was swung back and forth by its unseen bearer. It shed a curious yellow light and not the white flame of the common lantern, and now it rose a trifle higher and slowly resolved itself into a weird fantastic face.

Three minutes later I was out of the house, using the back stairs to avoid the company in the library, and had crossed the garden and crawled through the hedge. As I rose to my feet a voice greeted me cheerfully:

"Well, done, Chimney Man! You were a little slow hitting the trail, but you do pretty well considering. How did you manage with Aunt Octavia about that slipper? I had a narrow escape in the second floor hall when I came out of Ceclia's room. I must have lowered a record setting upstairs. And one shoe isn't a bit comfortable. Allow me to relieve you."

"Here's your slipper. You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

"For losing my slipper? I thought Cinderella had made that respectable."

She placed her hand on my shoulder, lifted her foot and drew the pump on with a single tug.

"Well, what did Aunt Octavia say?"

"Oh, she had thoughts too dark to express. You probably heard what we said. It was she who found the slipper."

Hezekiah laughed. The wind caught up that laugh and whisked it away jealously.

"She found it and carried it to you, chimney man, and I skipped just as you began that beautiful story about finding it in Beacon street. I'm not supposed to see her, you know, until Ceclia is all fixed. Hurry and tell me how you got me out of it."

"How did you know I would try to explain it? You did a perfectly foolish thing in running the house that way, scaring Lord Arrowwood nearly to death, to say nothing of me. Why should I help you?"

"Oh, you're a man and I was just a little girl who had lost her slipper," she replied. "I was sure you would fix it up."

She drew from behind a bowdler by which we stood a pumpkin of portable size, which I surmised had been carved into the most hideous of Jack-o'-lantern terms by the shrewd hand of Hezekiah. "Come!" she cried. "If you are good and won't begin preaching about my slipper I'll show you the funniest thing you ever saw in your life."

In my joy of seeing her I was neglecting Ceclia's commission. Very likely Hezekiah had forgotten all about her theft. Here, I reasoned, was a nature that delighted in the nearest pleasure. I would follow her Jack-o'-lantern around the world for the chance of seeing the fun brighten in her brown eyes, but I had made a promise to Ceclia, and I meant to fulfill it.

She led me now across the meadow over a stone wall, up a steep slope and by devious ways through a strip of woodland. I bore the Jack-o'-lantern. She had hidden me in with some notion I did not question of making me a party in whatever mischief was afoot.

Also, she demanded that I repeat fully the story I had told her aunt of the finding of the slipper.

"You are better than I thought you were, Chimney Man," she declared when I had concluded and added her aunt's comment. "You may be sure that tickled Aunt Octavia. You can be almost as well as an architect. Aunt Octavia says architects are better than dressmakers."

"It was my weakness for the truth that caused me to abandon architecture. For heaven's sake, what are you up to?"

I had kept little account of the direction of our flight, and I was surprised that we had now reached the stile over which I had watched the passing of the suitors on the afternoon of my meeting with Hezekiah in the orchard.

"This is the appointed place," she remarked, taking the pumpkin from me and dropping down on the far side of the stile.

"Hezekiah, I've trotted across most of Westchester county after you, and my arm is paralyzed from carrying that pumpkin. I must know what you're up to right here, or I'll go home. Besides, there's a mist falling and you'll be soaked. What do you suppose your father thinks of your absence at this time of night?"

"Oh, he'll never forgive me for not letting him in on this. This is the grandest thing I ever thought of. Sit on this stile and gently incline your ear toward the house. It's about five those gentlemen were leaving Ceclia, and they'll be galloping for their lives in a minute, and then—"

Hezekiah whistled the rest of it.

While we waited I tried once or twice to revert to the silver watchbook, but without success. Hezekiah was a mistress of the art of evasion with her tongue as well as her feet.

"Wait till the evening performance is over and I'll talk about that. Sit Quiet! Crawl over there out of the way, and when I say run, beat it for the road."

These last phrases were uttered in a whisper, her face close to my ear. She gave me a little push, and I withdrew a few yards and waited. The ground I may say, was wet and the little man became a monotonous anvilman.

The light of the lantern fell warmly upon Hezekiah's face as she held its illumined countenance toward her, crouching on the stile steps. I heard now what her keener ear had caught earlier—the tramp of feet along the path. The suitors were returning to the inn, and the voices of one or two of them reached me.

The nature of Hezekiah's undertaking suddenly dawned upon me. Near and nearer came the patter of feet and I heard, for I could not see, the scraping of Hezekiah's slipper—a wet little shoe by now—as she crept higher on our side of the stile. The first fall or groped blindly for the steps, slipped on the wet plank, growled and rose to try again. That growl marked for me the leader of the van. Hartley Wiggins, beyond a doubt, and in no great hurry, I guessed. The others, I judged, had trodden upon one another's heels at the moment Wiggins stumbled. Thus let us imagine their approach—six gentlemen in top hats headed for a stile on a chilly night of rain.

It was at this strategic movement that Hezekiah pushed into the middle of the stile platform, its grinning face turned toward the advancing suitors, the Jack-o'-lantern her hand had fastened.

I marked its position by its faint glow an instant, but an instant only. The world reeled for a moment before the sharp cry of a man in fear. It cut the dark like a lash, and close upon it the second man yelled in a different key, but no less in accents of terror. The first arrival had dung himself back, and so close upon him pressed the others and so unexpected was the halt that the six men seemed to have dung themselves together and to be struggling to escape from the hideous thing that had interposed itself in their path.

All was over in a moment. In the midst of the panic the lantern whirled out, and instantly Hezekiah was beside me.

"Skip!" she commanded in a whisper, and, catching my hand, she led me off at a brisk run. When we had gone a dozen rods she paused. We heard voices from the stile, where the gentlemen were still engaged in disentangling themselves, and then the plinks boomed to their steps as they crossed. They talked loudly among themselves, discussing the cause of their discomfiture. The lantern, I may add, had been knocked off the stile by the thoughtful Hezekiah when she blew out the light.

"Oh, that Hartley Wiggins! I might have known it!" she cried. "Know what?" I asked, pricking up my ears.

"That he would be afraid of a pumpkin with a candle inside of it. Did you hear that yell?"

"Anybody would have yelled," I suggested. "I think I should have dropped dead if you'd tried it on me."

"No, you wouldn't," she asserted, with unexpected flattery.

"Don't be deceived, Hezekiah. I should have been scared to death if that thing had popped up in front of me."

"I don't believe it. I gave you a worse test than that. When I switched off the lights and swung a feather duster down the stile well by a string and tickled your face you didn't make a noise like a circus callopie scaring horses in Main street. Podunk. But that Wiggins man?"

"He's a friend of mine and as brave as a lion. Out in Dakota the sheriff used to get him to go in and quiet things when the boys were shooting up the town."

"Maybe, but he shied at a pumpkin and can be no true knight of mine. Ceclia may have him. I always suspected that he wasn't the real thing. Why, he's even afraid of Aunt Octavia."

"Well, I rather think we'd better be."

"My wheel's in the weeds somewhere. Please pull it out for me. I'm going home."

"But not alone. I can't let you do that, Hezekiah."

"Oh, cheer up!" she laughed, aroused by my lugubrious tone. "And here's something you asked me for. Don't drop it. It's Ceclia's memorandum book. Give it back to her and be sure no one sees it and you needn't look into it yourself. And we've got to have a talk about it and Ceclia. Let me see. There's an iron bridge across an arm of that little lake over there and just beyond it a big fallen tree. Tomorrow at 9 o'clock I'll be there. I've got to tell you something, chimney man, without really telling you. You'll be there, won't you?"

"I'll be there if I'm alive, Hezekiah."

I had found the wheel and lighted the lamp. She scouted my suggestion that I find a horse and drive her home. The lighting of the lamp required time, owing to the wind and rain, but when its thin ribbon of light fell clearly upon the road she seized the handle bars and was ready to mount without ado.

She gave me her hand. It was a cold, wet little hand, but there was a good friendly grip in it. This was the first time I had touched Hezekiah's hand, and I mention it because as I write I feel again the pressure of her slim cold fingers.

"Sorry you spoiled your clothes, but it was in a good cause. And you're a nice boy, Chimney Man. Good night."

CHAPTER XIX.

A Tryst With Hezekiah.

I WOKE the next morning to the laughing of Miss Octavia's fowl-pie piece. In spite of the crowding incidents of the day and night I had slept soundly, and save for a stiffness of the legs I was none the worse for my wetting. The service of the house was perfect and in response to my ring a man appeared who declared himself competent to knock my dress clothes into shape again.

Ceclia met me at the foot of the stairs, looking rather worn. I thought we were safe from interruption a moment longer, as her aunt's gun was still booming, and I followed her to the library.

"Please don't tell me you have failed," she cried tearfully. "That little book means so much, so very much, to us all!"

"Here it is, Miss Hollister," I said, placing it in her hand without parley. "I beg to assure you that I return it just as you saw it last. Please satisfy yourself that it has not been tampered with in any way. I have not opened it, and it has not left my hand since I recovered it."

She had almost snatched it from me, and she turned slightly away and ran hurriedly over the leaves.

"I thank you, Mr. Ames. Thank you, thank you. You have rendered me the greatest service, and I hope you were able to do so without serious inconvenience to yourself."

"On the other hand, it was the smallest matter, and instead of being a trouble I found the greatest pleasure in recovering it. It is not possible that in throwing rejected correspondence into the waste paper basket that stands beside your desk—there is such a basket, is there not?"

"Yes," she replied breathlessly.

"Is it not possible, then, that that little booklet, hardly heavier than paper itself, may have been brushed off with out your seeing it?"

"It is possible, I must admit that it is possible, but—"

"The well trained maid who cares for your room, seeing scraps of paper in the basket by your desk, naturally carried it off. When I accepted your commission last night I went directly to the cellar, sought the lid into which waste paper is thrown and found among old envelopes and other litter this small trinket, which but for my promptness might have been lost forever."

"It doesn't seem possible," she faltered.

"Oh!" I laughed easily. "Possible or impossible, you could not but on the witness stand swear that the book had not dropped into the waste paper basket precisely as I have described?"

"No, I suppose I couldn't," she answered slowly.

My powers of mendacity were improving, but her relief at holding the book again in her hand was so great that she would probably have believed anything.

"You see," she said, clasping the book tight, "this was given me for a particular purpose, and it contains a memorandum of greatest importance. And I was in a panic when I found that it was gone—for my recollection of certain items I had recorded here was confused, and there was no post."

DEATH OF MRS. SCROGGIE

Was One of the Oldest Residents of the City of Charlevoix.

Had Resided in This Vicinity for Two Score Years
—Death Caused by Paralysis.

Mrs. James Scroggie, aged 84, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Gray of Hayes, April 26, of paralysis.

Mrs. Scroggie was one of the oldest pioneers of this section, having lived in this vicinity for forty years,
the most of the time in this city, until advancing years and failing health caused her to live with her daughter. Mrs. Scroggie, whose husband died soon after their removal to this county was the mother of six children, five of whom,
Mrs. William Gray of Hayes, William Scroggie of this city, Dean Scroggie of Hayes, Tom of Owosso and Mrs. George Zipp of Petoskey survive. A daughter, Mrs. Frank Fogg of Idaho, died several years ago.

The funeral was held Tuesday from the home of Mrs. Gray. Rev.
Mr. Kwerin of the Adventist church of Petoskey, of which Mrs. Scroggie was a member, officiating.

WORK WILL COMMENCE

In June on the Survey of New Trunk Line State Roads.

Preliminary surveying of the route of Michigan's proposed new 3,000 mile trunk roads will be started by the engineers of the state highway department about the middle of June. In order to handle the increased duties in connection with the building of the road, at least two other engineers will be employed by the department.

One of the new men will act as a field worker. He will traverse the line recommended for the state turn pike. The second of the engineers will prepare plans for bridge construction.

It is not thought that much actual work of building will be done on the building of the road this year.
Work during 1913 will be chiefly devoted to mapping out plans for furtherance of construction work in 1914 and thereafter.

ble way of setting myself straight. Now all is clear again. I feel that I make poor acknowledgment of your service, but if at any time—

"I may think no more of it," I replied. And at this moment Miss Hollister appeared and called us to breakfast.

"If it is perfectly agreeable to you, Arnold, I will hear the story of the finding of the ghost at 4 o'clock, as just before, let me have sent a telegram to Mr. Pepperton asking him to be present. He's at his country home in Hedding and can very easily motor down. As no motor is allowed on my premises, he shall be met at the gate with a trap."

"You have sent for Pepperton?" I exclaimed.

"That is exactly what I have done, and as he knows that I never accept apologies under any circumstances he will not disappoint me. In addition to repudiating him for not telling me of the secret passage in this house, I have another matter that concerns you, Arnold, which I wish to lay before him. The new cook that your friend sent to my kitchen yesterday is the best we have had, Cecilia, and I beg that you both indulge yourselves in a second helping of country scrambled eggs."

A little later I met Miss Hollister in the hall dressed for her ride.

"Arnold, you may ride whenever you like. I may have forgotten to mention it. What have you on hand this morning?"

"An appointment with a lady," I replied.

"If you are about to meet the owner of that Beacon street slipper I wish you good luck."

She was drawing on her gauntlets and turned away to hide a smile, I thought. Then she tapped me lightly with her riding crop.

"Cecilia's silver notebook was missing last night. She told me of her loss with tears. She has it again this morning. Did you restore it?"

"It was my good fortune to do so."

"Then allow me to add my thanks to hers. You are an unusually practical person, Arnold Ames, as well as the possessor of an imagination that pleases me. You are becoming more and more essential to me. Cecilia's preaching, and I cannot say more at this time."

When they had ridden out of the porte cochere I set off across the fields to keep my tryst with Hezekiah. The air had been washed sweet and clean by the rain of the night, and sky was never bluer. I was surprised at my own increasing detachment from the world. My days at Hopewell were the happiest of my life.

I reached the fallen tree that Hezekiah had appointed as our trysting place a little ahead of time and indulged in pleasant speculations while I waited. I was looking toward the hills expecting her to come skimming along the highway on her bicycle, when a splash caused me to turn to the lake. Dull of me not to have known that Hezekiah would contrive a new entrance for a scene so charmingly set as this! She had stolen upon me in a light skiff and laughed to see how her silent approach startled me. She dropped one oar and used the other as a paddle, driving the boat with a sure hand through the reeds into the bank.

"This morning, and the days are long!"

Such was Hezekiah's greeting as she jumped ashore. She wore a dark green skirt and coat and a narrow fur-lined hat that clung to her throat snugly. A boy's felt hat, with the brim played up in front, covered her head.

"You seem none the worse for your wetting, Hezekiah. You must have been soaked."

"So must you, Chimmeyers, but you look as fit as I feel, and I never felt better. Did they catch you crawling in last night?"

"I didn't see a soul. You know I'm an old member of the family now. No body was ever as nice to me as your Aunt Octavia."

"How about Cecilia?"

"Having found her silver notebook and given it back to her before breakfast, I may say that our relations are altogether cordial."

"Are you in love with her—yet?" asked Hezekiah carelessly, tossing a pebble into the lake. The "yet" was so timed that it splashed with the pebble.

"No; not—yet," I replied.

"It will come," said Hezekiah a little ruefully, casting a pebble farther upon the ebullient water.

"You mean, Hezekiah, that men always fall in love with your sister?" She nodded.

"Well, she's a good deal of a girl."

"Beautiful and no end cultivated. They all go crazy about her."

"You mean Hartley Wigzins and his fellow bandits at the Prescott Arms?"

"Yes, and lots of others."

"And sometimes, Hezekiah, it has seemed to you that she got all the ad-are some things you don't know yet."

"I am here to grow wiser at the feet of Hezekiah, daughter of kings. Open the book of wisdom and teach me the alphabet, but don't be sad if I balk at the grammar."

"I never knew all the alphabet myself," said Hezekiah dolefully. Then she laughed abruptly. "I was bounced from two convents and no end of Hudson river and Fifth avenue education shops."

"The brutality of that, Hezekiah, wrings my heart. Yet you are the best teacher I ever had, and I thought I was educated when I met you. But I had only been to school, which is different. Not until the first time our eyes met, not until that supreme moment!"

"Mr. Ames," Hezekiah interrupted in the happiest possible imitation of Miss Octavia's manner. "If you think that, because I am a poor lone girl who knows nothing of the great, wide world, I am a fair mark for your cajolery I assure you that you were never more mistaken in your life."

"You oughtn't to mimic your aunt. It isn't respectful, and besides, you have something to tell me. What's all this rubbish about Cecilia's silver memorandum book? Suppose we discuss that and get through with it."

"You see," she began earnestly, "I'm going to tell you something, and yet I'm not going to tell you. So far as you and I have gone you've been tolerably satisfactory. If I didn't think you had some wits in your head I shouldn't have bothered with you at all. That's frank, isn't it?"

"It certainly is. But I'm terribly fussed for fear I may not be equal to this new ordeal."

"If you fall we shall never meet again; that's all there is to that. Now listen real hard. You know something about it already, what not the main point. Aunt Octavia got father to consent to let her marry us off—Cecilia and me. Cecilia, being older, came first. I was to keep out of the way, and father and I were not to come to Aunt Octavia's new house up there or meddle in any way. While we were abroad I was treated as a little girl and not as a grownup at all. But, you see, I'm really nineteen, and some of Cecilia's suitors were nice to me when we were travelling. They were nice to me on Cecilia's account, you know."

"Of course. You're so hard to look at it must have been painful to them to be nice to you—almost like taking poison. Go on, Hezekiah!"

"You needn't interrupt me like that. Well, as part of the understanding, and Cecilia agreed to it—she thought she had to for papa's sake—she was to marry a particular man. Do you understand me—a particular man? Aunt Octavia gave her a little notebook—she bought it at a shop in Paris at the time Cecilia consented to the plan—and she was to keep a sort of diary so that she'd know when the right man turned up. Now we will drop the notebook for a minute, only I'll say that Cecilia was to keep the book all to herself and not show it to any one, not even to Aunt Octavia, you know, until the right man had asked Cecilia to marry him. Now who do you suppose, Mr. Ames, that man is?"

TALK NOT WRITE

Michigan Children to Do Oral Language Work in the Schools.

The art of story-telling is to be received according to the plans of Superintendent of Public Instruction Luther L. Wright as evidenced by the course of study and the oral language bulletin which has just been issued by the department. Superintendent Wright believes that children learn to speak correctly by speaking rather than by writing essays and studying technical grammar. As a result, the course of study requires oral language work in the first six grades.

The language work for the lower grades will be largely the oral reproduction of stories which have been told or read by the teacher. Stories are to be dramatized, the children making up the necessary dialogue, thus developing originality, fluency of speech and proper sentence construction, as errors will be pointed out and corrected. For the more advanced grades, the children will be expected to compose and tell original stories, descriptions and arguments.

The purpose of the language work is to develop habits of correct speech, stimulate original thinking, encourage self-expression and fluency.

No matter how long you suffered, or what other remedies have failed to cure, Foley Kidney Pills will surely help you. They are genuinely tonic, strengthening and curative, build up the kidneys and restore their regular action. John Velbert, Foster, Calif., says: "I suffered many years with kidney trouble and could never get relief until I tried Foley Kidney Pills which effected a complete cure. Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

"That is being impertinent. If you talk that way I shall call you Mr. Ames and go home."

"You can't do that, Hezekiah."

"I should like to know why not. If you say I'm jealous of Cecilia now or that I ever was I shall be very, very angry, for it's not true."

"No. You see things very differently now. You told me only last night that Cecilia might have Hartley Wigzins. Assuming that she wants him! And you and he have been good friends, haven't you? You had good times on the other side. And while Cecilia was in town assisting Providence in finding your aunt a cook you went walking with him."

"I did," mocked Hezekiah.

"And why do you suppose I did?"

"Because Wigzins is the best of fellows, a solid, substantial citizen who raises wheat to make bread out of."

GRAND OFFICERS WERE PRESENT

A Dedication of Charlevoix's Elegant New Masonic Temple.

One of the Finest in the State—Large Crowd Was Present.

Monday was a big day for members of the Masonic order all over northern Michigan, the occasion being the dedication of Charlevoix's new Masonic temple, which is one of the finest in the state. Every train and boat was loaded with members of the order, while automobiles came in from all directions loaded with members of the order, who came to accept the hospitality of Charlevoix Masons and rejoice with them over the building of their beautiful new temple.

The following grand officers were present and performed the solemn ceremonies dedicating the temple to the use of the ancient craft: George L. Lusk of Bay City, junior grand warden; Rev. W. H. Gallagher of Caro, grand chaplain; John H. Hawks of Lansing, senior grand deacon and Lon B. Winsor of Reed City, grand secretary. Mr. Keyes of Olivet, head of the Eastern State was also present.

After the dedication members of the fraternity, to the number of between three and four hundred enjoyed one of the finest banquets ever served in this city.

After the banquet a short time was spent in visiting after which the day's festivities wound up with a dance.

This was the fitting close of the efforts of Charlevoix Masons to build themselves a home. Oftentimes they have met with discouragements but having set their goal they pushed forward and the result is not only a credit to the fraternity but to the city as well.

STATE ROAD WORK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Over 4,700 miles of state highways in Pennsylvania have been repaired and put in good condition since they came under the state jurisdiction in June of this year. Practically all of this work was done in three months, considerable time being required by the state highway department to get its repair work under way. It was not until July 1 that systematic operations were possible.

One of the first things accomplished was the elimination of the old fashioned water breaks which used to be a serious impediment to travel through out the state. All these have been removed, and it is stated that there is not one left on the 4,700 miles of road, which have received the attention of the state department.

Next in importance has been the work of dredging, underdraining the removal of underbrush and overhanging bushes at the roadsides in order to allow the roads to dry up quickly after rains and the reworking of the road surfaces. Most of the work has been done with the materials at hand, although in some instances macadam construction has been used. All of these roads will be gone over again before the winter sets in, the present work being to a considerable extent of a temporary character designed to keep the main highways in the best possible condition until the money to be derived from the proposed $50,000,000 bond issue shall provide funds for the more thorough repair of the highways.

POINTS ON HIGHWAY LAW

Traverse City Record-Eagle Prints Interesting Article.

FROM PEN OF E. B. ALLYN

Giving Necessary Procedure to be Followed by Township Boards.

On Repairing Old or Building New Roads—Other Points on Building of Good Roads and Highway Law.

Within a few days the new boards will be in action in townships, and as usual there will be quite a few new men, or perhaps some old ones who are somewhat behind the times. I have much interest in country roads and would like to have the public business done according to an approved plan in stead of the haphazard way it has been done.

When we come to the point when we will put all public officers on a civil service plan, as we should, we will get better public officers than we do. Until then we will have to use other means.

There are a few laws that the public as well as the town officers should understand in order that all may work together in harmony and that costly mistakes be avoided. It is surprising how many officers having road matters to settle are not posted on the law. Some highway commissioners have nothing but old bones, and some who have the latest do not read them.

First, the law requires that no road work except repairs, shall be done without the commissioner first having a competent surveyor survey the road and take levels of center and sides and make a plat and profile, which shall be submitted to the township board for their approval, and if they object to the grades, a new profile shall be established. This final plan and profile shall be on file with the township board before any work shall be done on the road, and the highway commissioner who shall do any work and issue any orders for pay for such illegal roads or the clerk who shall countersign any such orders, or the treasurer who shall pay any such orders are liable to a fine.

It has been the custom of many towns to have the commissioner get the survey and profile and submit it to the town board without consulting the township boards in advance. This may be all right as to some roads, but wherever there is a chance of a question to arise it is better to proceed as follows: Have the commissioner cause a survey of the center line and on each side of say 20 or 30 feet on each side and where heavy cuts and fills on irregular ground occur, take levels at sufficient points to enable the engineer to compute the cubic yards of cut and fill. Then have the engineer make his plat and profile of the center line at least and have all the elevations figured out in his record book of levels. Then call a meeting of the township board on the road itself and have the full board present.

Begin at the beginning of the road that is where the survey begins or station zero. Have the board in consultation with the engineer fix the grade of each section of road and have the clerk record it. Thus, one of the board would move that a plan or up grade of say three per cent should be made from station zero to station 4 perhaps. The supervisor would put the motion and the clerk would record it. In that way the whole board would see at a glance the difficulties of the case and could act intelligently.

The reason the board should act in this matter instead of the commissioner is that the board knows the financial condition of the town more accurately than the commissioner alone. They may be divided in opinion in which case it is better to get their action as a whole. Then it sometimes happens that conditions will be explained on the ground that would satisfy those present who would otherwise be kickers.

The board knows how much the town is prepared to spend, and the grades depend somewhat on that.

When new roads are laid out the commissioner should carefully read the law. This requires that the statute be strictly adhered to. He must not entertain a petition unless it is signed by seven freeholders and the road must be described with sufficient accuracy so any one can see where it will go. Within five days after the final determination he must file a plat with the township clerk signed by the surveyor making the survey. This leaves him scant time at best. Commissioners often do not notice this and leave the matter of survey until the last and if he does not have time to do it within the statutory time, it makes the proceedings void and a new petition and hearing must be made. This takes time and expense.

When surfacing roads with gravel two things stand out as necessary: Gravel should be screened, as the sand, if very much is left, keeps the pebbles apart and they will not cement well. Then don't put any clay on the road. This is one of the points on which nearly all engineers and professional road builders are agreed, but many citizens and commissioners are not. The inexperienced man will often argue for clay. But this acts like a grease when wet, and lets the pebbles work out of place and the clay works on top, which makes a muddy and rutty road.

MAYOR ISSUES PROCLAMATION

Designating Thursday, May 15 as Clean Up Day in Charlevoix.

Urges All Citizens to Resolve to Join Clean Up Brigade on That Date.

Charlevoix, Mich., May 5.
Gov. Woodbridge N. Ferris has designated Thursday, May 15, 1913, as Spring Clean Up Day for Michigan.

I hope every resident of this city will make a special effort on that day to see that everything about their premises that is unsanitary, unsightly or inflammable be removed and properly taken care of. If all will join earnestly in this united effort, we can have the most clean and sanitary city in all this domain of Michigan.

Everybody make your resolve now to join the clean-up brigade and when May 15th comes, please get busy.

Yours for a genuine "Charlevoix the Beautiful!"

Harry Nichols Mayor.

MCHUGH-CAGNEY

Former Resident of This City Married at Kalamazoo April 30.

Wednesday morning of last week, the marriage of Miss Henrietta F. McHugh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McHugh of Kalamazoo, and Walter E. Cagney of the same city, was solemnized at St. Augustine's church, Kalamazoo, with sodality honors by the Rt. Rev. Monsignor F. A. O'Brien.

Miss McHugh is well known in this city, while Mr. Cagney is highly esteemed in his home city, where he is employed as an engineer on the Michigan Central railroad.

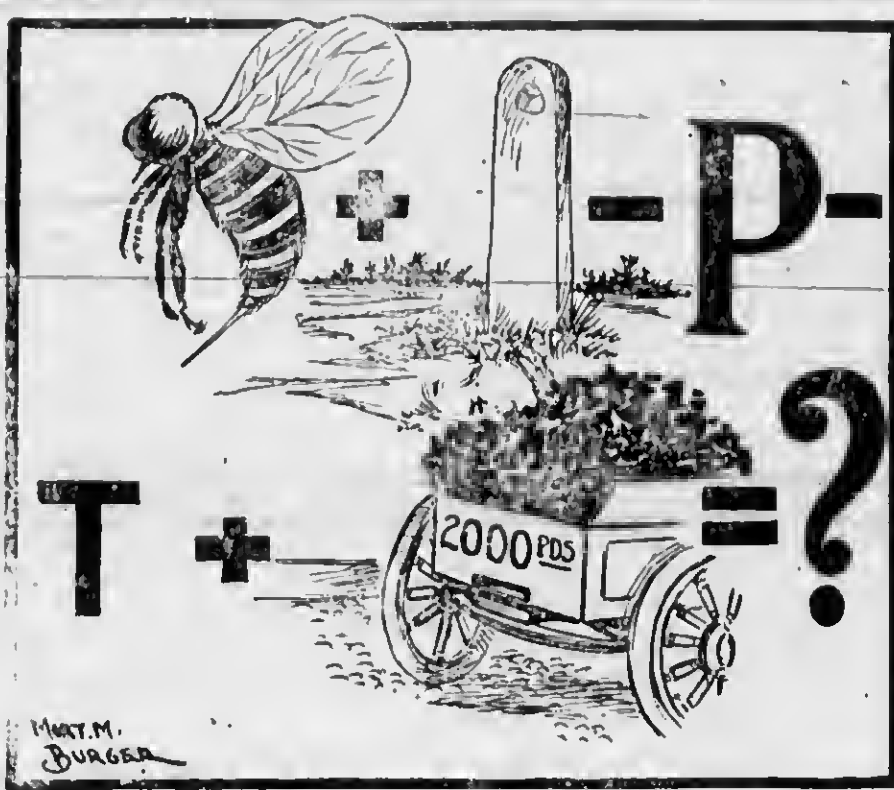

Those attending the wedding from this city were Mr. and Mrs. Harry McHugh and Anna McHugh. After the wedding breakfast which was served to about fifty guests, Mr. and Mrs. Cagney left for an extended visit to eastern points and will be at home to their many friends after June 1st at 118 Oakland drive, Kalamazoo.

COLLEGE OF HORTICULTURE

Movement Under Way to Establish One at Traverse City.

Demand for Trained Fruit Growers Greater Than the Supply.

A horticultural college for Traverse City is to be one of the next steps in the development of the Western Michigan region. The settings of fruit trees in the twenty counties reaching from Ottawa to Emmet has been so great during the past few years and is continuing at such a pace that it is apparent that many horticulturists are needed to care for the orchards in a scientific manner. In the past it was believed that any man who knew the difference between an apple tree and an oak was sufficiently wise to be in charge of an orchard. But now it is different. It is admitted that successful orcharding requires men with special training as does the practice of medicine or the following of the legal profession.

Because of the heavy tree setting these men are going to be needed in the early future. The training of these men must begin at once that they may be ready as the new big orchards come into bearing, which will be within the next five years. At present the larger orchard propositions are hiring men who have been trained elsewhere, some in the west. There is no reason why Western Michigan, so long as it is in the developing business, should not develop horticulturists as well as orchards.

Last fall the proposition of a county agricultural school, was laid before the supervisors of Grand Traverse county, which board appointed a committee with instructions to report at the annual meeting to be held the coming October. In the meantime the subject is being discussed by the farmers' organizations of the county and the arguments for and against the proposition are being carefully analyzed.

It is now proposed by James E. Coad, president of the Needham Business College of that city, to establish a private school, provided the funds are not available for a public institution. He has been over the matter carefully and finds that there are two private agricultural schools in the United States, and that both are successes and profitable investments. He has had the plans drawn for a college building, has also picked out the land that will become the experiment farm, and has in mind some of the men who will be engaged as instructors. As the present demand for trained fruit growers is greater than the supply attention will practically be given to horticultural subjects during the early years of the institution. As the need of scientists in the other lines of the agricultural industry becomes more pronounced, courses of study will be added so that in time the large-scale farmers of the region can turn to this college for such experts as may be needed to properly carry forward the various propositions.

MANY CHANGES ARE MADE

In the Game and Fish Laws of the State of Michigan.

Licenses Must be Taken Out in Other Than Home Counties.

The work of the legislature during the session which has just closed, relative to game and fish laws, is looked upon by Game Warden Oates as commendable and the action-pleases him. He says that more real constructive legislation was passed during the session than by any other legislature of Michigan in several years.

Recommendations made by the department to the legislature were as follows: To provide for a hunters license; civil service for deputies; non-resident rod license; changing the time for opening the season for killing deer and partridge; limiting the killing of deer to male with horns; abolishing spring shooting; providing for the issuing of permits for the shipments of deer heads during closed season; requiring reports to be made of game birds and animals shot by hunters; reports to be attached to hunter's licenses; coupons attached to deer licenses, where shipments were being made, to be in indelible ink; to amend beaver law; to prohibit the sale of brook trout by anyone; to prohibit the catching of bass, trout and other game fish in the connecting waters of the great lakes during closed season for such fish. Nearly every recommendation was passed.

All persons fishing outside their own counties, also aliens, must take out a license, paying $3 for all kinds of fishing and $1 where they wish to catch fish other than game fish, as provided by the Corlies angler's license law. Money raised in this way will be put into a fund to help support the fish hatcheries.

The Verdier bill, compelling all hunters shooting outside their own counties to take out a gun license of $1, is another important bit of legislation accomplished. This will be added to the state treasury. Another bill was passed providing that frogs be protected, and another prevents the shipment of turtles from the state.

Perhaps the most important action as a result of a conference committee from states bordering on the great lakes held in Madison, Wisconsin, was the passage of a bill providing that non-resident hunters may ship deer out of the state.

Other laws governing hunting and fishing provide:

For killing and selling of rabbits. That the deer hunting season extend from November 10 to November 30.

That the closed season for squirrels be extended to 1915.

That the closed season for quail, pheasant, grouse and wild turkey be extended to 1917.

For the shooting of bear. For an increase in deer hunters' license for aliens, making it $25.

ENTERTAINED LAST THURSDAY

Charlevoix Rock Product Company's Plant Visited by Citizens.

Work of Building and Installing Machinery Constantly Going Forward.

Thursday afternoon, as previously announced, the citizens generally were invited to inspect the plant of the Charlevoix Rock Product company. At the time set, conveyances were in waiting and a big crowd accepted the invitation—in fact the city was pretty well deserted for the rest of the afternoon.

In the larger part of the visitors it was a revelation so silently has the work of adding to the plant gone on until few have realized that there has been built up in our city one of the largest plants of the kind to be found anywhere. The visitors were welcomed by Manager Sloan, who first showed them the workings of the steam shovel which scoops the rock from the quarry and loads it upon the cars. From the quarry it is taken to the crusher. Several train loads a day are handled and taken to the crusher, which is an immense piece of machinery, and are manufactured into the products of the company, which are in demand all over, as Charlevoix rock is of a superior quality.

Another point of interest was the electric power plant of the company, which is the largest in this portion of the state, but like all the different departments of the company, permanency and thoroughness has marked every step in the work of construction from the time the first test of the rock was made until the present time, and the plant is a big addition to the industrial life of our city. The work of increasing its capacity is constantly going forward and in the Charlevoix Rock Product company we have an industry which will mean more and more to us each year.

Mr. Priebe is survived by three sons, Will, Louis and John and a daughter, Mrs. Charles Nadolski. The funeral will be held to-morrow with burial in North Bay cemetery.

PLANS ARE GO- ING FORWARD

For the Alfalfa Campaign Trip Through Western Michigan Region.

RAILROADS WILL CO-OPERATE

Tour Throughout Kent County Last Week Was a Grand Success.

Western Michigan Trip is Planned to Start About June Fifteenth—Will Reach All Points in Territory.

Last week the first campaign for alfalfa ever pulled off in the United States took place in Kent county. Fourteen automobiles loaded with enthusiasts and authorities on alfalfa toured that county. Charlevoix being represented by E. S. Stacks. Mr. Stacks informs us that in every place they were greeted with enthusiasm and partial arrangements were made for a campaign in this county.

The success of the Kent county movement has spread throughout western Michigan, and as we noted last week, plans are being laid for a western Michigan alfalfa special to tour the western part of the state. Already the Pere Marquette has unofficially given the idea its endorsement and Professor Holden has agreed to attend a conference in Grand Rapids in the near future, when the details of the proposed plan will be worked out.

C. M. Carroll, who is an organizer for Professor Holden's department of agriculture, connected with the International Harvester company, has gone into the question and tentatively announced that it should be possible to start the western Michigan alfalfa train by June 15.

Under the plan now being considered, boards of trade in all the western Michigan cities and villages will be asked to co-operate, and the railroads and other interests, which will be benefited by the improvement of land which alfalfa promises to bring will be asked to co-operate.

It is the idea of the promoters to have this train work two or three weeks in twenty-two counties of western Michigan. It will be a bigger and broader campaign than anything ever attempted before. Alfalfa will be the principal feature, but it will not be alone. Motion picture machines with instructive and entertaining films will be carried, together with stereopticons and slides. There will be a corps of experts and speakers sufficient to provide for side trips or feeders in every county. The train will halt at some central point where the farmers may come in and view the vast exhibits to be carried and receive expert advice and instruction on alfalfa or any other agricultural subject.

Automobiles will be used as means of transportation from the train to the side points to be covered and will carry equipments, experts and speakers sufficient to give a most comprehensive idea of the crops to be exploited.

Rev. Ehle Busy Man.

The many friends of Rev. F. D. Ehle former pastor of the Baptist church here, now pastor of the Warren avenue church, Detroit, will be pleased to know that work there moves on prosperously. His church has recently engaged a paid, assistant who gives her entire time to the work.

The Northern Baptist convention meets in Detroit May 21-23, and will be attended it is expected by 3000 delegates and visitors. Rev. Ehle is chairman of the local entertainment committee, and says they expect the greatest gathering this year ever in the history of the Baptist denomination.

Purchased Draft Horse.

R. S. Shapiro and Calvin Supernaw have purchased the French Draft Stallion DeCota of Charles R. Cain of Lenawee county. DeCota is one of the best horses ever brought into the county and his owners are to be congratulated for their part in helping to bring up the standard of Charlevoix county horses.

The Siege of the Seven Suitors

By
MEREDITH NICHOLSON

Copyright, 1910, by Meredith Nicholson

CHAPTER XX. Seven Gold Reeds.

I WATCHED her hands as they deftly cut and finished some dry reeds. The air grew warm as the sun climbed to the zenith and Hezekiah hung aside her coat. The breeze caught the ends of her hair and she was wholly absorbed in her task, and no boy could have imagined a pocket knife better. The first reed she made a trifle longer than her hand. The succeeding ones she trimmed to graduated lessening lengths, till seven in all had been cut, and then she noted them.

"Seven," she murmured, laying them neatly in order on her knee. "I remember the right number by a poem I read the other day in an old magazine."

She reached down and plucked several long leaves of tough grass with which she began to bind the reeds together, repeating:

"Seven gold reeds grew tall and slim
Close by the river's beaded brim.
Syrinx, the maid, flitted past;
Pan, the goat, followed fast."

"It will be easier," said Hezekiah, "if you hold the pipes while I tie them."

I found this opportunity wholly agreeable. It was pleasant to sit on a log beside Hezekiah. It seemed no far cry to the storied Mediterranean and Pan and dryads and naiads, as Hezekiah bound her reeds to the music of her recitation. She seemed to be telling of something that she had seen herself an hour ago.

"He spread his arms to clasp her there
Just as she vanished into air
And to his bosom warm and rough,
Drew the goat to his close enough."

"I don't remember the rest," she broke off. "But there! That's a pipe fit for any shepherd!"

She put it to her lips and blew. I shall not pretend that the result was melodious. She whistled much better without the reeds, but the sight of her, sitting on the log, her feet tucked under her, her head thrown back, her eyes half closed in a mockery of rapture at the shrill, wheezy uncertainties and ineptitudes she evoked, thrilled me with new and wonderful longings. A heart, a spirit like hers would never grow old. She was next of kin to all the elusive, fugitive company of the elf world. And on such a pipe as she had strung together beside that pond to this day Skellan shepherd boys whistle themselves into tune with Theocritus!

"Take it," she said. "I can't tell you more than I have, and yet it is all there. Chimneys. Read the riddle of the reeds if you can."

I took the pipe and turned it over carefully in my hands, but I fear my thoughts were rather of the hands that had fashioned it, the fingers that had danced nimbly upon the stops.

"There are seven reeds—seven," she affirmed.

She amused herself by skipping pebbles over the surface of the water while I pondered, and I deliberated long, for one did not like to blunder before Hezekiah. Then I jumped up and called to her.

"One, two, three, four, five, six—seven! Not until the seventh man offers himself shall Cecilia have a husband. Is that the answer?"

For a moment Hezekiah watched the widening ripples made by the casting of her last pebble. Then she came back and resumed her seat.

"You have done well, Chimney Man, and now I'll not make you guess any more, though I found it all out for myself. When Aunt Octavia gave that memorandum book to Cecilia I knew it must have something to do with the seventh man. You know I love all Aunt Octavia's nonsense because it's the kind of foolishness I like myself, and the idea of a pretty little notebook to write down proposals in was precisely the sort of thing that would have occurred to my aunt. And it was in the bargain, too, that she herself should not in any way interfere or try to influence the course of events. It should be the seventh suitor, willing, nifty. And I suspect she's been a little scared too."

"She has indeed! She was almost ready to throw the whole scheme over last night. Your naughtiness had got on her nerves."

"You missed the target that time Aunt Octavia loves my naughtiness, and I think she has really been afraid Sir Pumpkin Wiggins would catch me. Now, I didn't roam my aunt's house just for fun. I was doing my best to keep Cecilia from getting into some scrape about that seventh suitor plan. I found out by chance how to get into Hopefield and about the hidden stairway and the old rooms tucked away there. Papa really discovered that. A carrier in Katoanah who worked on the house helped to build papa's bungalow; and he told us how that rule came to be there. That dyspepsia cure man, who also immortalized himself by inventing the ribless umbrella, was very superstitious. He believed that if he built an entirely new house he would die. So he had his architect build around and retain those two rooms and that stairway of a house that had been on the ground almost since the revolution. Mr. Pemperton, the architect, humored him, but hid the remains of the relic as far out of sight as possible."

"Trust Papa for that! And he did it decently!"

"Yes; but it didn't save the umbrella man. He died anyhow—or maybe his ples killed him. Papa was so curious about it that he took me with him one night just before Aunt Octavia moved here, and he and I found the rooms and the stair and the secret spring by which, if you know just where to poke the wall in the fourth floor hall you can disappear as mysteriously as you please."

"I wish, Hezekiah, that you would stay caught!"

"But how on earth did you darken the halls so easily? You nearly gave me heart disease doing that!"

"Oh, that was a mere matter of a young lady in haste. When I found how easily I could pass you on the stair it became a fascinating game, and it was no end of fun to see just how long it would take you to catch me."

"I wish, Hezekiah, that you would stay caught!"

"Be very, very careful, sir! We're talking business now. There's another order for you before you dare become sentimental."

"Then hasten. Let us be after it!"

"Things are in a serious predicament. I can tell you. I was frightened when I looked into that notebook. I didn't like to do that, but I had to assist Providence a little. Five men have already got their quarters."

"Then why don't they clear out and stop their nonsense?"

"Oh, it's their pride, I suppose, and every man probably thinks that when Cecilia has seen a little more of him in particular, in contrast with the others, he will win her favor. They're afraid of one another, these men. That's the reason they've been herding together so close since the first day you came."

Mr. Wiggins was taking it for granted that he was the whole thing—just like the mail—and those others forced him to join in some arrangement by which they were to hang together. These calls in a bunch came from that, as though any one of them wouldn't take advantage of the others if he saw a chance! Some of this I got from Wiggins himself, the rest I just guessed."

"But you may not know that they sent a delegation after me late to warn me off the grass."

"That was Mr. Dick. He never saw me when Cecilia was around, and he was terribly sulky sometimes—and supercilious, but I'm going to get even with him. I've about underlined him for number six," she concluded with the manner of a queen who, about to give her chief executioner his orders for the day, glances calmly over the list of victims.

"That's a good idea. Dick is insufferable. I hope you haven't counted wrong."

"As we were saying, about the notebook," she resumed, "the fifth man has already been respectfully declined. The dates of the proposals are written in the notebook, so I learned from the book that Mr. Ormsby, Mr. Arbutnot and Mr. Gorse had proposed on the steamer. Professor Hume, you know, tried his luck at Hopefield, and Lord Arrowood must have stopped Cecilia as she was riding to the station on my bicycle yesterday morning. His goose is cooked."

"He stopped to tell papa goodby and spoke very highly of you. Papa and you are the only gentlemen he met in America. But now we come to Mr. Wiggins."

"We do; and why in the name of all that is beautiful and good hasn't he tried his luck?"

"Because, knowing Cecilia's admiration for him," replied Hezekiah demurely, "I have kept him so diverted that he hasn't been able to bring himself to the scratch."

"You didn't want him to blunder in as the fourth, or sixth man?"

Hezekiah gravely nodded her pretty head.

"And while you were engaged in this stately labor, Cecilia has been afraid that you were seriously interested in him."

"That is like Cecilia. She's fine, and wouldn't cause me trouble for any thing," and there was no doubt of Hezekiah's sincerity.

"But now that I see the light and understand all this, how can we make sure that Wiggins will be on the spot at the right moment? While we sit here he may be the sixth man! I might take care of Wiggins by asking Cecilia to marry me, being careful to have him appear Johnny on the spot when I had been duly declined."

"Um! I shouldn't take any chances! I were you," she replied, looking to look at an imaginary bird in a tree-top for if you had counted wrong and were really the seventh man she would have to accept you!"

"Hezekiah?"

"Oh, I really didn't mean what you thought I meant. We don't need to discuss it any more. That's the worst I've arranged for you," she answered, and set her lips sternly.

"But, my dear Hezekiah, by what means can this be effected? I don't dare tell him the combination he's playing against or sit on him until the hour strikes."

"Certainly not; you mustn't tell him or anybody else. You know the plan, but you're not supposed to, and nobody must know I've meddled. Mean while Cecilia must expose herself to proposals at all times. Aunt Octavia's heart would be broken if she thought Providence had been tampered with. She likes Wiggins well enough, except that his ancestors were all Tories, and he can't be a son of the revolution."

She rose and pointed to her coat.

"Drop it into the boat for me, Chimney. We meet in funny places, don't we? Papa expects me for luncheon, and I must row back and get my bicycle. You? No, you can't go alone; you've got a lot of thinking to do, and you'd better be doing it."

A few minutes later, as I swung along the highway toward the Prescott Arms, I saw Cecilia Hollister riding toward me at a lively gallop. She crossed the bridge without checking her horse, and then, with a hurried glance over her shoulder, she pointed with her eyes to a highway.

I hurried after her and found her waiting for me in a quiet lane. She had dismounted and seemed greatly disturbed as I addressed her.

"I hadn't expected to meet you. I thought you rode off with your aunt toward Mount Kisco."

"We did, but on our way home Aunt Octavia stopped to call on a friend, and as I didn't feel in a mood for visits this morning, I rode on alone. I was walking my horse in the road beyond Bedford, just after I left Aunt Octavia, when who should ride up beside me but Mr. Wiggins. He had evidently been following me."

She expected me to express surprise and with the information that Hezekiah had just imparted fresh in my mind I dare say she was not disappointed in the effect of her words. It was thinking rapidly and fearfully, if my friend had sought her in the highway and offered himself in some fresh accession of ardor he might even now be a rejected and hopeless man, but I was unwilling to believe that this had happened.

"What you tell me what happened in the road when Hartley rode up beside you?"

"Oh, nothing happened; really, nothing! Nothing could have happened for the excellent reason that I ran away from him. It wasn't what he did or said, it was the fear of what he might say."

"If it had been Mr. Dick who had joined you in exactly the same way in the highway, you would not have minded in the least, Miss Hollister. Isn't that the truth?"

CHAPTER XXI.

Trouble at the Prescott Arms.

CECILIA'S hand, that had rested on the pommel of her saddle, dropped to her side, and she stood erect, her eyes wide with wonder.

"What do you mean?" she gasped.

"I mean exactly what I have said. If it had been that strutting young philosopher from the west you would—well, you would have allowed him to say what was in his mind. Am I not right?"

"I wonder, I wonder," she faltered, drawing away the better to observe me.

"You wonder how much I know? To relieve your mind without parleying further, I will say to you that I know everything."

"Then Aunt Octavia must have told you, and that seems incredible. It was distinctly understood!"

"Your aunt told me nothing. Not by words did any one tell me."

"Not by words?" she asked, eyeing me wonderingly and clearly feeling that I might be playing some trick upon her. "Then can it be that Hezekiah—but not Hezekiah doesn't know?"

"Trust Hezekiah for not telling secrets," I answered evasively. "Give me credit for some imagination. The air of Hopefield is stimulating, and in the few days I have spent in your aunt's house I have learned much that I never dreamed of before."

"I don't understand it. You are wholly inexplicable."

"I am the simplest and least gullest of beings, I assure you. Yet I have done some things here not in the slightest way related to chimney decorating and something else I expect to do for which I believe you will thank me through all the years of your life."

"Ah, if you really know, that is possible," she sighed wearily. "I am very tired of it all. I was very foolish over to have agreed to Aunt Octavia's plan. You have seen these men. Any one of them might, you know." And she shrugged her shoulders impatiently.

"Any one of them might be the sex

SEMI-ANNUAL ELECTION HELD

Oluf Nordrum Chosen President of the Men's Bible Class.

Earl Young Gave an Interesting Description of His Trip to Panama.

Sunday the semi-annual election of officers of the Men's Bible class took place, which resulted as follows:

President, Oluf Nordrum.
 Vice-President, W. H. Miller.
 Secretary, Ray Bennett.
 Treasurer, Benjamin Brown.
 Leader, R. W. Kane.

E. J. Neech, who retires from the presidency, has presided over the class since its organization, and under whose leadership it has grown to be one of the most vital forces for the upbuilding of our city, leaves the position against the protest of the class.

The matter of fixing the hour of meeting was postponed until next Sunday.

Earl Young gave a very interesting description of his trip to Panama and the work of construction of the canal. At the close of his talk he was kept busy answering a running fire of questions in regard to the canal, proving that he was a careful observer, as he answered them all to the satisfaction of his questioners.

Next Sunday the class will meet at the usual hour—five o'clock p. m.—An address by Professor Butler of Boyne City is scheduled, but if he is unable to be present Don Campbell will give his impressions of the Panama trip.

LETTER FROM GLOUCESTER

Written to the Courier by a Former Charlevoix Resident.

Charlevoix Fishermen Are Doing Well in Massachusetts City.

Gloucester, Mass., April 30, 1913.
 Editor Courier:—

I thought perhaps you would like to hear from the east and as I was formerly a Charlevoix resident and feel a deep interest in my many Charlevoix friends I will let them hear from us through the columns of the Courier.

Gloucester is a beautiful little city of 25,000 inhabitants on the rocky coast of the Atlantic. Cape Ann coasts of her magnificent scenery and large number of summer visitors who come here mostly to bathe and breathe the salt air.

The fishing is the main industry here although there are many granite works. The city is built on the mammoth granite rocks and they are used for building houses, fences and almost every purpose that rocks can be used for and such lovely buildings. The Roman Catholic church is a very beautiful structure. The weather here is lovely and warm like June in Michigan.

The Charlevoix fleet of fishermen here are doing fine. The lobster, owned by former Charlevoix men, Captain Peter Tysver as master, brought in 4,000 of nice fish April 29; the Naomi Bruce, Captain Shores as master, caught 7,000 pounds in seine, aside from their gill net catch. The other boats, while we are not informed of their catch, are doing well.

There is quite a colony of Michigan fishermen here which makes it very pleasant for all. The Gloucester people are a very friendly, sociable people; the churches are well attended. The people are fine, but we begin, after spending four months here to long to see dear old Charlevoix again for it is always a welcome sight to our eyes, for with all the beauties of Massachusetts, Charlevoix the Beautiful is the home for me.

MITCHELL-LYNGKIP

Well Known Eveline Township Young People United in Marriage April 30.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mrs. Karen Lyngklip of Ironton Wednesday April 30, the contracting parties being her daughter, Miss Dagmar and Peter Mitchell.

The bridal party entered the parlor to the strains of music rendered by Mrs. Meggison. In response to the questions asked by Rev. Quinton Walker they plighted their faith to each other for life. The bride was accompanied by her sister, Miss Lily. Peter Carson acted as best man.

Miss Lyngklip has lived with the family of Thomas White of Boyne City for years and has a host of friends, while Mr. Mitchell is well known in this community. The happy couple will live on the Mitchell homestead.

GOOD ROAD PARAGRAPHS.

Some one said, "A good road, serviceable throughout the year, enables the farmer to watch the markets and not the roads."

The paralyzing effects of bad roads run through business and social life.

The spreading of the doctrine of good roads will bring a large increase in the volume of business for everybody.

VALUE OF GOOD ROADS.

They Would Tend to Lower the Cost of Living.

The 2,000,000 miles of unimproved roads which the country has to its credit are as heavy a burden upon the unfortunate "ultimate consumer" as is an excessive tariff. Every pound of produce hauled from the farm to the market bears an inflated price because of the excessive cost of its transportation from the farm to the point of shipment.

For instance, it costs an average of almost 2 cents more to haul a bushel of wheat from the farm to the station nine miles away than it does to ship a bushel of wheat from New York to Liverpool, 3,100 miles away. This excessive transportation cost must be made up by the farmer in charging more for his wheat, by the miller in charging more for the flour, by the baker in charging more for bread and finally, of course, by the "ultimate consumer" in paying more for his bread.

As the farmer and the miller are also consumers, the excessive cost of road transportation really levies a tax upon all. Whatever doubt there may have been about the need for systematic road improvement in the United States, facts and figures such as these finally dispel it.

If there was never any work calculated to fill the proverbial "long felt want" it was the work of the office of public roads.

SPECIAL FAIR DAYS ANNOUNCED

While the special days at the 1913 Michigan State Fair remain practically the same as to order and name still General Manager Dickinson intends to make each date more distinctive of its name than ever before. For instance on Grange Day and Gleaner's Day he proposes having the guests of the occasion addressed on topics which interest them by experts in their line.

Old Soldiers will be invited to attend the Fair as guests of the management any day during Fair week. The following is the order of the feature days:

Sept. 15, Children's Day; Sept. 16, Gleaner's Day; Sept. 17, Grange Day; Sept. 18, Canadian Day; Sept. 19, Detroit Day; Sept. 20, Automobile Day.

Goes to Elk Rapids.

C. D. McLachlan left Tuesday for Elk Rapids, where he has purchased a blacksmith shop. Mr. McLachlan has followed blacksmithing in this city for the past twenty years and understands the business from A to Z.

Mrs. McLachlan will remain with us until school closes, when she will join Mr. McLachlan.

Both Mr. and Mrs. McLachlan are among our best citizens and it is with regret we chronicle their departure.

Puns on People's Names.

Some years ago a popular form of social amusement was found in punning on people's names. "Why did So-and-so?" "Because Such-and-such." The originator of the fashion was no less notable a person than the Quaker poet, John Greenleaf Whittier. On a lecturer named Mary Grew, visiting Boston in 1871, Whittier wrote a poem, "How Mary Grew," each stanza ending on a variation of the pun:—
 The world were safe if but a few
 Could grow in grace as Mary Grew.

The Stumbling Horse.

A stumbling habit may be caused by poor shoeing, or it may be caused by ignorant or careless hitching. Too tight check-rein is often the cause. Sometimes a harsh bit with a tight check-rein will defeat the balance and the horse is then apt to fall.

The Siege of The Seven Suitors

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

"Well, it isn't so much a matter of seeing her, when you've read of her in your life and dreamed about her. She's in every fairy story that ever was written; she dances through the mythologies of all races. There is the kingdom of the pure in heart. Her will is that a beautiful prince should marry her, and her thoughts the dignity of a queen. You can hardly say 'grass is greener'."

Cecilia's manner changed, and she smiled. "You seem to have an attack of something. It looks serious."

I helped her into the saddle, and she looked down at me with amusement to her eyes. My praise of Heczekiah had pleased her, and I felt, as when we journeyed together into town, her kind, human qualities. She said: "You are not coming home for lunch, are you? Then I shall see you at 4. I hope the hiding place of the ghost will prove interesting. Aunt Octavia has built her hopes high, and I may add that she has expressed the greatest admiration of you to me. On her ride this morning she declared that great things are in store for you. I hope so, too, Mr. Ames."

She gave me her hand and rode away. The luncheon was a little distant, and I set off at a brisk pace, turning over in my mind various projects for controlling the characters now upon the stage in such manner that Wiggins should become the seventh man. Cecilia could not always run away from him with out violating the terms of her aunt's stipulation, and it was unlikely that she would attempt further to guide or thwart the pollinating finger of fate. I relied little upon my arrangement effected among the suitors to stand in the way. Hume had already found a chance to speak. Lord Arrowood had blurted the dust and turned his face homeward, and Wiggins had been near the brink only that morning. It was unlikely that any of the active candidates remaining would stumble upon the key to the situation, which Heczekiah had given into my keeping.

It was well on toward 2 o'clock when I approached the inn. Before long the suitors would depart for their afternoon call at the manor, which was an established event of the day. Just as I was about to enter the gate I was arrested by an imposing voice calling, and John Stewart took came running toward me. To my surprise he greeted me cordially, even offering his hand.

"You thought you would come after all. Well, I'm glad you did. I've decided that there should be peace between us."

In stature he was the shortest of the suitors, but what he lacked in height was compensated for by a tremendous dignity. "You have several times addressed me, Mr. Ames, in a spirit of continuity which I have hesitated to punish by the chastisement you deserve, but I am willing to let bygones be bygones. I had intended to offer myself to Miss Hollister this afternoon, with every hope of success, but I yield to you. My only request is that you inform me at once when you have learned her decision."

He clapped on his cap and folded his arms, clearly satisfied with the expressions of surprise to which my feelings betrayed me. Could it be possible that he had guessed the truth, perhaps by deductive processes of which I was ignorant? Whether he had reasoned from some remark thrown out by Miss Octavia as to the influence of seven in the affairs of life and her application of that fatal principle to the choice of a husband for Cecilia, I could not guess, but assuming that he had caught that clue, he might readily enough have managed the rest. I must not allow him to see what I suspected. "My dear professor, there's an elegant warning against the Greeks bearing gifts. You must give me time to inspect the horse."

"Are you questioning my good faith?" "Be it far from me! I'm a good deal tickled, though, by your genial assumption that if I offered myself to this lady I should be declined with thanks."

He was again belligerent. It may have occurred to him that I might know as much as he, but at any rate he grinned. It was a saturnine grin I did not like. "I'm starving to death at the door of an inn, and you must excuse me. Have you seen Hartley Wiggins lately?"

"I have indeed. He's taken to honey-horselack rides. He's off somewhere now. He hasn't the stamina for a contest like this. One by one the nuptial leaves are falling," he added, with special intention, "and I have given you your chance."

"Thanks, light belonging Socrates from the lands of the Ogallalas. For so much courtesy I shall take pleasure in sending all your posthumous works. Let us come being absent."

With this I left him and entered the low raftered office. It was really a pleasant lounge room, unspoiled by the usual hotel office paraphernalia. Dick had followed close behind, and as I paused, hearing voices raised aggradi-

in the dining room beyond. I turned for an explanation. As the suitors had been the only guests of the inn since their advent, I attributed the sound to strife in their own camp. "You'd better take a look at the fellows," he said, "they're quite out of their heads."

The dining room was still by ajar, and I went in. Ormsby, Shapton, Barney, Henders, Hume, George and Arrowood had been engaged with cards at a round table in an alcove, but some dispute having apparently arisen, they stood in the places engaged in a rhomboidal delirium. As near as I could determine, some of them—I think it was Ormsby—were to abandon the game, which had been undertaken to determine in what order they should be permitted to pay visits to Heczekiah in future, the girls together having grown impatient. They were so absorbed that they failed to note my appearance.

"It's no good, I tell you," cried Ormsby. "There's no fairness in this unless all take their chances together."

"You ought to have thought of that before we began. This was your scheme, but because the cards are running against you you want to quit. I say we'll go on!" This from Henders, who struck the table sharply as he concluded.

"You know Wiggins and Dick weren't going in when we started, and you are not likely to get them in now. Your anxiety to cut the rest of us out by any means seems to have unsettled your mind," shouted Ormsby. "I say let's drop this and stand to our original agreement that no man speak till the end of the fortnight."

"After that whole scheme has been torn to pieces like paper, there's nothing fair in this business from the start. We ought to have kept Arrowood here and held together. And we ought to have got rid of that Ames fellow. He didn't belong in this at all!"

Ormsby's voice rose to a disagreeable squeak as he closed with this in dictation of me. Shapton seemed to be the only one of the group who had not lost his senses. He was in the further corner of the alcove, out of sight from the door, but I heard him distinctly as he addressed the other suitors with rising anger.

"We're acting like fools, and each of the most contemptible sort! I only agreed to this game to satisfy Ormsby. The idea of our sitting here to draw cards to determine the order in which we shall offer ourselves to the noblest and most beautiful woman in the world would be coarse and vulgar if it were not so ridiculous. I'm out of it!"

"My interest in this colloquy had led me further into the room, and hearing my step they all turned and faced me. Dick had continued at my side, but the black looks they sent our way

Miss Octavia stood beside me. She was dressed in a dark brown riding habit—the feather in her fedora had emphasized her usual brisk air. Ormsby turned up the card. It was the ten of diamonds.

"Gentlemen," I cried, pointing to the card, "what trick is this? Can it be possible that you have been trifling with me in a fashion for which men have died the world over by sword and pistol?"

"Kindly explain, Arnold, the nature of this difficulty," Miss Octavia commanded. "Simply this, Miss Hollister. If I must answer, I had offered to fight these three gentlemen in order. It was agreed that the man who drew the jack of clubs from the pack with which they had been playing should be my first victim. They have shuffled their own cards and have drawn the whole pack and there is no jack of clubs in the pack! The only possible explanation is one to which I hesitate

They Failed to Note My Appearance. were intended, I thought, rather for me. My appearance roused Ormsby to a fresh outburst.

"You're responsible! If you hadn't forced yourself upon the ladies at Heczekiah there wouldn't have been any of this trouble!"

"You're only an impostor anyhow. You went to the house to fix a chimney and seem to think you're engaged to spend the rest of your natural life there," protested Henders.

"Then they dropped me and assailed Dick."

"We'd like to know what you expect to gain by dropping out. You got cold feet mighty sudden," bellowed Ormsby. George and Henders paid similar tributes to the imposture, whose melancholy grin only deepened.

Henders rallied for a final shot at me. "A good horsewhipping is what you deserve," he cried, leveling his finger at me.

"Gentlemen," I began, not without upward quaking, "you have spoken bold, naughty words to me, and in reply I must say that your vocal efforts suggest only the melodies of the braying jackass and that your manners, to speak mildly, are susceptible of considerable improvement."

"You leave this neighborhood within an hour," boomed Ormsby, and in his efforts to free himself from his chair it fell backward with a crash that echoed through the long room.

"Then summon the coroner by telephone, for I shall not be taken alive," I answered quietly, trying to recall my youthful delight in Purkiss, Athos and Aramis.

"Come along, let us put him out," Henders was saying in an aside to Ormsby.

"You were playing a game here for a stake not yours for the winning," I continued. "Now I suggest that you shuffle the pack—you three—who are so full of valor—shuffle the pack, I say, and draw for the jack of clubs. Whoever is the fortunate man I shall take pleasure in holding through your very charming resentment."

"Agreed!" cried Henders and the three thing themselves into their chairs. The object of their consent had not moved me for a moment. I was sure, would have fought them all, but I could do myself as the cards rattled on the bare table with the reflection that, considering the fact that I had never in my life held violent hands on a fellow being, I was conducting myself with admirable assurance.

"My weight has always hung well within 120, and physicians have told me that I was incapable of taking on flesh or muscle. Any one of these men could easily box me through the window I had indicated as a means of their own exit."

Shapton caught my eye and in a flash with a slight jerk of the head that I had better run before it was too late. The poliostruck card with which Henders had fallen upon the cards was disappearing, to put it mildly, I judged me in the ribs and offered to hold my coat.

"It will not be necessary," I replied, carelessly. "Tender your services to the other gentlemen. Come, gentlemen—hurry! Let us not waste time here."

"If Ormsby turns up the card you're a dead man," Dick was muttering gloomily.

"They're all alike to me," I replied loudly. "Mr. Ormsby is very beautiful. I shall hope not to disfigure him permanently." But as I spoke my tongue was a wobbly dry clapper in my mouth.

I was heading over now, watching the three men pick up the cards, and once, when I misread the jack of spades for the jack of clubs, a shudder passed over me. They were down to the last card, and Ormsby's hand was on it.

Then I looked at the door to steady myself, and began to feel within me, for, by Ormsby's foot—a large and heavy one—by an upturned card, the jack of clubs, whose lone symbol magnified itself enormously in my amazed eyes.

At this moment I became conscious that something had occurred to distract the attention of the other men, who were staring at some one who had entered noiselessly.

"Gentlemen, you seem immensely interested in the turn of these cards. I am glad to have arrived at the critical moment. Mr. Ormsby, will you kindly lift the remaining card from the table?"

Miss Octavia stood beside me. She was dressed in a dark brown riding habit—the feather in her fedora had emphasized her usual brisk air. Ormsby turned up the card. It was the ten of diamonds.

"Gentlemen," I cried, pointing to the card, "what trick is this? Can it be possible that you have been trifling with me in a fashion for which men have died the world over by sword and pistol?"

"Kindly explain, Arnold, the nature of this difficulty," Miss Octavia commanded. "Simply this, Miss Hollister. If I must answer, I had offered to fight these three gentlemen in order. PREVENTION OF FOREST FIRES

Fire Protective Department of Hardwood Manufacturer's Association.

Send Out Communication Urging Co-Operation in Their Work.

The season of 1913 opens with many calamities, melting snows accompanied by rain and wind have brought to the residents of many localities death and destruction. We have read at a distance of the ruin and wretchedness of Nebraska, Indiana, Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania. As the days pass the reality of those figures, the fearful truth of these cold statements of calamity come home to us with all the helplessness of human weakness; all the constant tragedy and enduring misery of human life.

We know not the why of this influence bearing destruction and loss to our great commonwealths, we of Michigan feel a security in our escape from a visitation of a riot of the elements. In this fancied security we are prone to forget the calamities of the past and I desire at this time to call your attention to the death and property destroying force which will soon become a menace to the residents of Michigan's forest area, unless we are on the alert and use great care, we shall see and feel the power of a great calamity.

Michigan forest fires are known the world over for their death and panic producing disasters; homes and towns burned; thousands of men separated from wages and food; poverty and distress walk hand in hand, brought to the public in a few short hours by fire, a life-saving servant when under control and a life-destroying agent once it escapes the hand of man. The people in the path of wind and flood, which fell upon our neighboring states, were helpless in any effort they might put forth in the prevention of the terrible force of the elements. With us, in the problem of forest fires, we have it within our power to prevent the awful conflagrations which sweep our fair state. Investigations of the various causes of forest fires have brought us to the conclusion that ninety-five per cent of all forest fires are due to carelessness of some individual or set of individuals. How can we prevent forest fires?

1. Be careful in the use of fire.
2. Hold that match until it is out.
3. If you are a smoker be careful with pipe, cigar and cigarette.
4. If you have slash to burn, employ help enough that your fire may not get away from you and destroy the property of others.
5. Put your camp fire out.
6. If you see a fire put it out. If too large to be extinguished by you, report it at once by telephone, telephone or messenger to the chief warden's office, Gaylord, at our expense. We want your co-operation; in return we will give you protection without cost to you. Thanking you in advance for your interest in the cause for "No Fires This Year."

Charles F. Hickok,
Chief Warden.

SILLO WISDOM.

Observe These Points and Get the Best Results From Your Labor.

The single point about silos is that it must be an air tight receptacle. A cement silo should always be pitched with tar or painted on the inside with some air tight material before filling.

The sole reason for building the silo is that it is the most economical way of storing a succulent feed. We can store three times as much dry material in a silo per square foot as we can in a hayrack.

The theory of silage is that sugar, protein, etc., turn to lactic acid by fermentation. Heat is generated, from 100 to 175 degrees, which kills off all germ life, or, rather, the germ life kills off itself. The longer this heat is maintained the better the silage. Around the outside the temperature is frequently low. Cypress, redwood and cement allow a little absorption, dry silage a little on the outside and provide fermentation.

Forty pounds per cubic foot is about the right weight for silage. It is practically uniform all the way down.

The most expensive place to build a silo is inside a barn. It may be desirable for convenience, however, and it takes up valuable space that can be used for storing grain or sheltering animals.

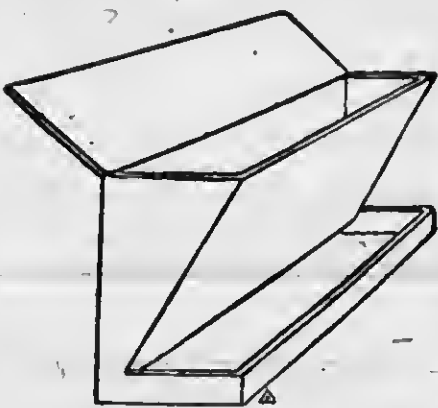

Silage must be cut fine. The finer it is cut the better it will pack and the better it will be. A quarter of an inch is about the right length, and a half inch is the limit at which silage ought to be cut. What you lose in cutting you gain in labor in the pit.—Farm Press.

CHICKENS' MEAL BOX.

Directions For Making a Self Feeding Hopper That Works Well.

A self feeding hopper may be made from a box purchased at the grocery store. A box sixteen inches deep, two feet wide and two and one-half feet long will make a very good hopper. The bottom of the box should form the back of the hopper.

The top of the box should be fastened with hinges to form a lid. The top of the box should be removed and slanted inward so as to leave a narrow space at the bottom for the mash to run out. The ends of the box should be sawed to suit the slanting board.

The lower side of the box should be fixed to hold the mash by nailing inch pieces around the edge. The box can be filled with the mash, giving the chickens a chance to eat what they desire. This will prove beneficial in the laying season.—Iowa Homestead.

EARTH AND OURSELVES.

"And God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it."
"We have multiplied, but the earth has subdued us," says Dr. Cyril G. Hopkins of Illinois.
"Three things are necessary for the most profitable improvement and preservation of our upland prairie and timber soils—limestone, organic matter and phosphorus."—Country Gentleman.

Don't Forget the Farm Girls.

Do not forget the girls when the returns for the crops and animals are to be distributed among members of the family. The boys may have toiled in the fields and in the barns, and their work may merit special reward. Reward them and thus encourage them to undertake more next year. But do not forget the girls who have made it possible for you and their brothers to labor. They have borne the heat of summer around the kitchen range; they have endured the drudgery of the weekly laundry; the choice preserves, pickles, canned fruits, etc., are a result of their labor.—Farm and Ranch.

"Test Your Seed Corn"

"Test your seed corn" as a slogan for every corn growing state in the Union would not be a bad one.
Do not trust to the other fellow to do the testing. Do it yourself. The corn planter box is the most convenient place to ascertain the bad from the good seed. When possible use seed testing 90 per cent or better. And then if the seed does not grow look to soil and seasonal causes for the poor stand. A good stand of good corn means good profit.—Farm and Fireside.

Back Him Up.

Here is a scheme that makes the work of loading hogs easy. When one will not go up into the chute but turns back, just slip a bushel basket over his head. He will start backing to get the basket off his head. Follow him up and you can steer him up the chute and into the wagon like a wheelbarrow.—Farm and Fireside.

NEW AUTO TAX LAW SIGNED

All Automobile Owners Will Pay Tax
Based on Horse Power.

EXEMPT FROM LOCAL TAXATION

Proceeds Will go in the State Highway Fund.

Will be Expended in Building of Trunk Line Highways—Routes of the Purposed Roads.

Among the most important bills passed by the last legislature was the one providing for an auto tax, based on horse power, the revenue from which will go into the state highway fund for the building of trunk line highways.

Under the law, which takes effect January 1, 1914, all motor vehicles will be stricken from the tax rolls. From that date on nobody will have to pay any local, county or state taxes on his machine. But when the owners apply to the Secretary of State for their annual license plate they will have to pay a fee of 50 cents per horse power on their machine.

All roads built on the trunk line plan will be entitled to double award. In cases where three or more miles are built by the county, the state will pay half the expense of erecting bridges and all bridges and culverts are to be designed by the highway department. Old state reward roads on the trunk lines are to be entitled to one-half additional state reward if kept in good repair and such roads widened or resurfaced will be entitled to additional reward to bring the total to an amount equal to the double reward for new roads. All must be inspected and approved by the highway commissioner.

The trunk line roads must be kept in repair to entitle any county to the double award for additional road. Provision is made for the establishment of trunk line highway districts by contiguous counties, and the highway commissioner is authorized to survey the trunk line through these districts and give estimates of cost.

The routes of the trunk lines follow:

Beginning in southwest corner of the state and running through Monroe, Wayne, Detroit, Mt. Clemens, Marine City, St. Clair, Marysville, Port Huron, Lakeport, Blaine, Jeddo, Amador, Applegate, Carsonville, Downingtown, Deckerville, Ruth, City, Bad Axe, Port Austin, with a branch from Port Huron through Brown City, Marlette, Vassar to Saginaw.

Beginning at Detroit, through Pontiac, Holly, Fenton, Owosso, Saginaw, Bay City, Tawas City, Alpena, Onaway, Cheboygan to Mackinaw City with branch from Owosso to St. Johns, Ionia, Grand Rapids and Grand Haven.

Beginning at south line of the state on meridian running north through Hudson, Addison, Jackson, Lansing, St. Johns, Ithaca, Alma, St. Louis, Breckenridge and thence north to connect with the Detroit-Mackinaw City line; a branch also from Alma north to Mt. Pleasant and Clare.

Beginning at White Pigeon, running north to Three Rivers, Schoolcraft, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Howard City, Big Rapids, Reed City, Evart to Cadillac and Traverse City.

Beginning at the state line south of Niles, running north through Niles, St. Joseph, Benton Harbor, Watervliet, South Haven, Grand Haven, Muskegon, Whitehall, Shelby, Hart, Pentwater, Ludington, Scottville, Minster, Traverse City, Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Pellston, Mackinaw City, with branch from Scottville through Reed City, Clare, Midland to Bay City.

Detroit to Wayne, Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor, Chelsea, Jackson, Albion, Marshall, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Paw Paw, Hartford to Watervliet.

Beginning at St. Ignace running west to Manistowic, Masonville, Gladstone, Escanaba, Spaulding, Iron Mountain, Crystal Falls, Iron River, Watersmeet, Hessemer and Ironwood with branch through Spaulding to Menominee and from some point south of St. Ignace to be specified by the highway department to the Soo.

Beginning at Escanaba, running north through Marquette, Negaunee, Ishpeming, Michigamme, L'Anse and Baraga to Calumet.

CHARLEVOIX WINS

Over Petoskey in Saturday's Game by a Score of 9 to 8 at Home Grounds.

The baseball game Saturday between Petoskey and Charlevoix on the home grounds resulted in a victory for the home team by the close score of 9 to 8.

The Petoskey boys were one run behind when they came to bat in the ninth inning, and were one in the lead when Charlevoix took its last chance. Three safe hits were secured off Talladay when Charlevoix came to bat. Taylor was the star of the game, getting four safe hits, good for seven bases. The score follows:

GRAND OFFICERS WERE PRESENT

Charlevoix Odd Fellows Had Big Meeting
Last Wednesday Evening.

Order in County is in a Very Thriving Condition in All its Branches.

The Odd Fellows of Charlevoix had a great gathering Wednesday night. The special occasion was the presence of Grand Master Harry L. McNeil of Paw and Grand Secretary Fred A. Rogers of Reading, who conducted a school of instruction. Besides the members of Round Lake lodge a large number of members of the fraternity were present from Boyne City, East Jordan, Ellsworth, Central Lake, Horton Bay and other points.

The grand officers are making a complete tour of the state, spending some time in every county and are bringing the work up to a high state of uniformity.

A program of interesting talks was given and the addresses of the grand officers were listened to with a great deal of interest, the members of the order went home with a higher appreciation of what it meant to be a member of this grand fraternity.

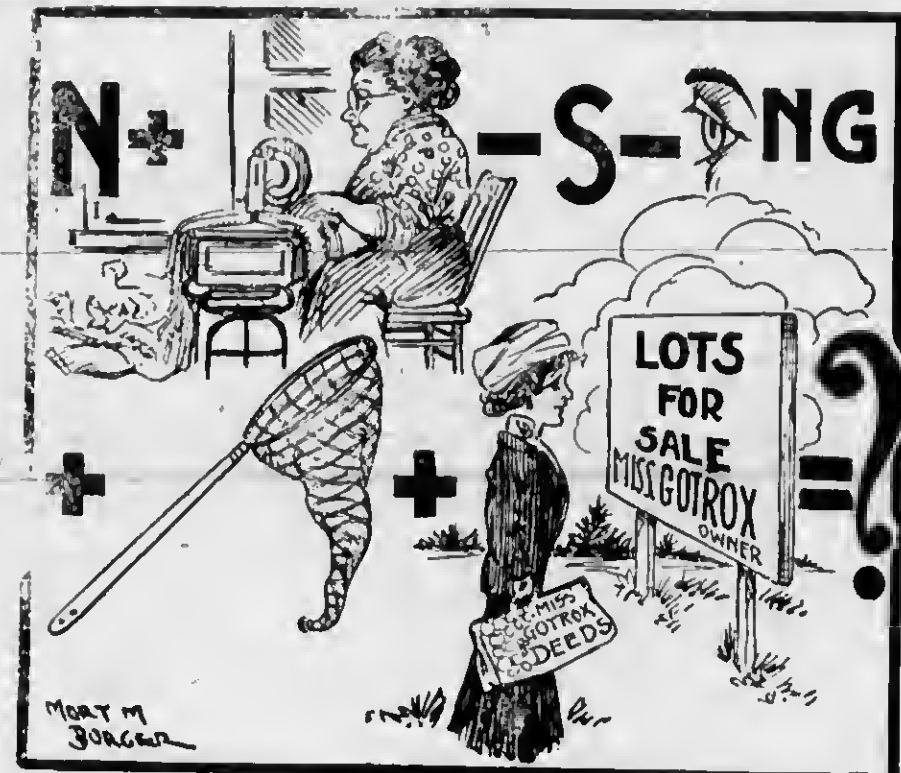

Charlevoix County Odd Fellows are in a very thriving condition. The lodges at Charlevoix, Boyne City, East Jordan and Boyne Falls all reporting growth while the new lodge at Horton Bay is taking in new members at every meeting. The Benefit association is also increasing in membership.

Fire Monday Morning.

The firemen were called out early Monday morning by fire caused by a lamp left burning at the home of Mrs. Jane Hamilton on the south side. The house and contents were a total loss, partially covered by insurance.

ATTENDANCE WAS SMALL

At Mass Meeting Held at Court House
Last Friday Night.

To Discuss the Commission Form of Government for Cities.

A mass meeting was held at the Court House Friday evening to discuss the commission form of government, either because our citizens are not interested, or from some other cause, the mass failed to materialize, a small crowd being in attendance.

The meeting was presided over by Mayor Nichols and R. W. Kane, Ex-Mayor Nordrum, Judge Mayne, A. L. Coulter and W. H. Miller were called upon to give their views on the question under discussion.

Mr. Kane believed a change in the present system was desirable. He believes in a mayor and council elected for terms of three years, partly from wards and partly from the city at large, in a non-partisan ballot, with provisions for the initiative referendum and recall. He would have the rest of the officials appointive with a new official called business manager, who would have general charge of the business of the city.

Ex-Mayor Nordrum believed in a longer term for our city officials with the initiative, referendum and recall.

Judge Mayne discussed several subjects, expressed his disbelief in the initiative, referendum and recall, as applied to city government, and in short expressed the belief that it was good enough to let well enough alone.

Mr. Coulter took for his text the recent change from a dry to a wet regime in Emmet County, and from that drew the conclusions that the people of any locality would receive just as good a government as public sentiment would warrant.

Mr. Miller expressed his belief in a non-partisan ballot and the elimination of ward boundaries for our officials.

J. H. Milford of East Jordan being present was called upon to give the experience of that city with the commission form and expressed that he thought it was working out better than the old system.

A motion was carried that a committee of five, of which the mayor should be a member should be appointed to report at a meeting to be called in the future on at changes they considered would be beneficial in our present charter.

Sealed Bids.

The city clerk will receive sealed bids up to 5:00 o'clock p. m. Monday May 13th, 1913 for the construction of a cement sidewalk along the east side of the prolongation of Grant Street. Said sidewalk to contain approximately 900 square feet, to be built according to plans and specifications on file in the office of the city clerk. Dated May 13th, 1913.

E. J. Miller
City Clerk.

CROP REPORT FOR APRIL

Northern Counties all in the Lead in Per Cent of Condition.

Prospects for Fruit Were Good at Date of Report—Wages are Higher.

WHEAT.
The condition of wheat is 83 in the state, 85 in the northern counties and 87 in the Upper Peninsula. The condition on April 1st was 82 in the state, 80 in the northern counties and 81 in the Upper Peninsula. The per cent of wheat that will be plowed up because winter killed or otherwise destroyed is 4 in the state, 3 in the northern counties and 1 in the central and northern counties.

Owing to the light yield and inferior quality of Michigan wheat for the year 1912, the grain suitable for milling and shipping is practically all marketed; consequently I think it unnecessary to ask the millers and grain dealers of the state for any more reports relative to wheat marketed by farmers until the months of August next, when the 1913 crops will be on sale.

RYE.
The average condition of rye in the state is 87, in the central and northern counties 88 and in the Upper Peninsula 91. The condition one year ago was 81 in the state, 88 in the northern counties and 90 in the Upper Peninsula.

MEADOWS AND CLOVER.
The condition of meadows and pasture in the state and northern counties is 89, in the northern counties 88 and in the Upper Peninsula 93.

The acreage of clover sown as compared with last year is 91 per cent in the state, 95 in the northern counties and 93 in the Upper Peninsula. The acreage of clover that will be plowed up because winter killed or otherwise destroyed is 10 per cent in the state, 8 in the northern counties and 3 in the Upper Peninsula.

OATS.
The acreage sown, as compared with last year is 99 in the state, 98 in the northern counties, 100 in the central counties and 105 in the Upper Peninsula.

SPRING PIGS AND LAMBS.
The per cent of spring pigs saved as compared with 1912 is 89 in the state, 91 in the northern counties and 91 in the Upper Peninsula. The per cent of lambs saved as compared with 1912 is 93 in the state, southern and central counties, 91 in the northern counties and 98 in the Upper Peninsula.

FARM WAGES.
The average monthly wages with board is $27.77 in the state, $28.11 in the northern counties, $26.55 in the central counties, $26.50 in the northern counties and $30.38 in the Upper Peninsula.

The average wages by the day, without board is $1.08 in the state, $1.75 in the northern counties, $1.59 in the northern counties and $1.55 in the Upper Peninsula.

The average wages in the state last year, by the month with board was $26.48 and the average wages by the day without board was $1.50. In 1901, ten years ago the average wages in the state by the month was $22.20 and the average wages by the day without board was $1.34.

FRUIT.
Reports from all sections of the state indicate a decided increase in the prospects of the various kinds of fruit over the 1912 report. The average prospect for peaches in the Michigan Fruit Belt is 80 per cent.

Frederick C. Martindale,
Secretary of State.

DEATH OF ERNEST BACON

Was Grand Child of Mr. and Mrs. John Brown of This City.

After having been rushed to Petoskey in an auto Friday morning and operated upon at two o'clock in the morning for an obstruction of the bowels, Ernest, the four year old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Bacon of Boyne City, passed away shortly after six o'clock.

Ernest was a grand child of Mr. and Mrs. John Brown of this city, and is survived by his parents, three brothers and three sisters.

The funeral was held from the home Sunday afternoon, those attending from this city being Mr. and Mrs. John Brown, Ben, George and Alfred Brown and families.

TOMORROW IS CLEAN UP DAY

State Fire Marshall Makes General Appeal to Citizens of State.

As to How Work Can Best Be Accomplished—Schools Urged to Help.

Tomorrow has been set apart by the state fire marshal and by proclamation of Mayor Nichols as "Clean up Day." The state fire marshal has sent out the following general appeal and Fire Chief Marshall has been busy notifying the public. It is hoped that the day will be generally observed by our citizens.

This is the time of the year when the winter rubbish should be taken care of. Every city is confronted with the danger from fire, and it is up to the citizens to do their part toward preventing the great loss of life and property occasioned through carelessness in storing rubbish, shavings, excelsior, tissue paper and the like in basements and alleys, and to see that yards and streets in their neighborhood are cleaned up. The following are some suggestions contained in the notice.

We know that we can rely upon the active support of the fire chiefs in co-operating with the department.

Schools should teach the practical and real things in life. The disgraceful fire waste and the sacrifice of property, lives and limbs to the fire should constitute one of these real things in life. Through a strong program on this day, occasional lessons and talks by teachers and citizens, scholars can be taught the facts of needless loss of life and property. They will thus learn, that most of the fire waste is preventable, that it is a loss to all and increases the cost of living for all. They will also thus be aided in forming habits of care in the handling of material liable to cause fire, and taught the important principle of responsibility to their neighbors and fellowmen, and so be ever watchful not to endanger them or their property.

CERTAIN RESULTS

Many a Charlevoix Citizen Knows How Sure They Are.

Nothing uncertain about the work of Doan's Kidney Pills in Charlevoix. There is plenty of positive proof of this in the testimony of citizens. Such evidence should convince the most skeptical doubter. Read the following statement:

L. B. Lancaster, 203 May street, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have proven a valuable remedy to me. I suffered for seven years from my kidneys. My back ached at night and when I arose in the morning I was stiff and lame. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and my rest was disturbed. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got them from the Ivy Drug Store. They have done me a world of good. I can rest better at night, my back is stronger and my aches and pains are gone. I am pleased to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McBarn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.—Advertisement.

This Interests Every Woman.

A family doctor said recently that women come to him thinking that they have female trouble, but when he treats them for their kidneys and bladder, they soon recover. This is worth knowing, and also that Foley Kidney Pills are the best and safest medicine at such times. They are tonic in action, quick in results. They will help you. Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

COUNTY NORMAL.

Mr. George Hamlin spent Sunday at his home this week.

Miss Blanche Rogers spent Sunday at her home in Harbor Springs.

We have resumed our work on our school garden, the plowing having been done.

Miss Bessie Allen and Miss Ruth Mitchell called at the normal room last Thursday afternoon.

Miss Hazel Gilmartin, Miss Agnes Worth and Miss Nerle Brechtersen spent Sunday at their homes in Bay Shore.

The class observed a lesson in chart class language of Miss Barkley's class. It was a very interesting lesson in dramatizing the story of the "Fox and the Grapes." The little people did exceptionally well.

Miss Sophia Berg and Miss Blanche Rogers have charge of the chart class children of Miss Jarvis' room this week. Miss Berg has charge of the nature study and sense training. Miss Rogers has charge of reading and language.

The spring months often find a woman tired out, with pain in back, hips and head, nervous and sleepless. Foley Kidney Pills will quickly prove their worth and value as a healer of all kidney and bladder ailments and irregularities. They are a splendid remedy for rheumatism, clearing the uric acid from the joints and system. Try them. Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

MAKING THE LITTLE FARM PAY

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

THE large profits which should attend pork raising are dissipated in too many cases through disease and neglect. Hog cholera will continue to scourge the country until all farmers learn that the pig is not naturally a dirty animal and that it requires field range and forage crops just as much as the horse and cow do.

Hog pens and yards should be kept clean, changing to fresh ground every year. Such forage crops as rape, artichokes, Canada peas and alfalfa ought to be accessible all summer. Shade and clean water are the next essentials. In addition it is well to give whey or sour milk and light rations of corn, peas or barley. Heavy feeding of grain is only necessary in the last few weeks when fitting for market. Corn silage is an excellent food. A little crushed coal, wood ashes, salt, charcoal and oilmeal aid a pig's digestion and contribute to its general healthfulness.

Young pigs are seriously injured by overfeeding and by wet floors and cold bedding. There should be no haste to feed grain either to a farrowing sow or a young litter. Both before and after farrowing the dam is better off with shops, mashes and boiled vegetables, such as carrots, potatoes and beets. When the young things get firmly on their feet the mother may be gradually put back on grain for the purpose of hardening up the flesh a little. Suckling pigs should have gradually increasing rations of bran, shorts and boiled vegetables.

BY A WISE FARMER.

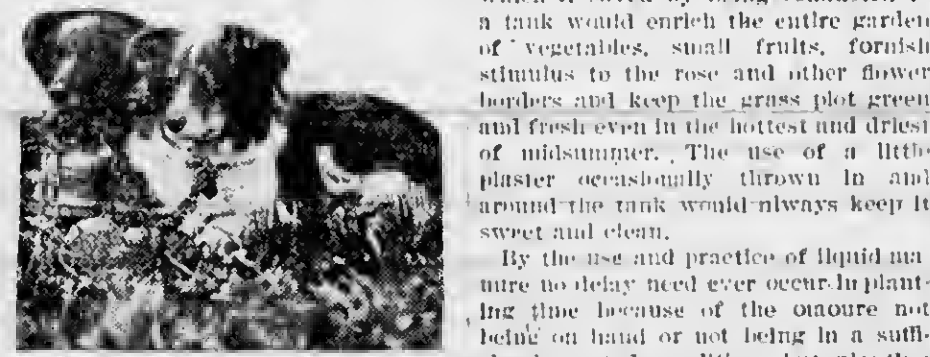

That was a wise remark made by a speaker in a farmers' institute when he said that "good farm judgment consisted largely in understanding principles and their working, and as good an understanding of conditions to know if the principles will apply."

THE DOG ON THE FARM.

Get a Good One and Train Him Properly Is an Excellent Rule.

Every farmer should have a dog. A well trained dog, no one will dispute, is the most companionable of all animals and a labor-saver to the farmer. Says a correspondent of the Orange-Juda Farmer: "Systematic instruction should be used in drilling the mind and body of the animal to bring out the intelligence required. A well trained, well treated and good tempered dog is one of the most agreeable creatures to have about the farm."

It is a paying investment to the owner to take pains in training a dog. In the house he should be taught thorough cleanliness, and when once this is established the animal is tolerable on the farm.

SCOTCH SHEEP DOG.

less it can get out of doors when mature demands it. When the dog is young, say two or three months old, he should be fed to small quantities. Never permit him to eat to his own satisfaction; because the ultimate result will be a very sick and unhappy little puppy. It is well to give him his last meal about two hours before he is shut up for the night.

Concentrated mixed with water, a very little salt and a handful of finely chopped liver or meat thrown in, the whole baked in a cake and when cold broken in bits and fed to the dog makes a very good snapper. A great many people insist on giving their dogs bread and milk for the evening meal, but this is not a very desirable diet if the dog is to be shut up in the house all night.

There are a great number of tricks which may be taught a dog, but the farm dog should not necessarily be taught tricks. He should be taught sensible things.

A great many, and I may say nearly 90 per cent of the dog owners of the present day, allow their dogs to run recklessly about through their neighbors' gardens, crops, etc. This is a very injudicious piece of business. It not only brings about a hard feeling, but is absolutely unprofitable.

Untrained Alfalfa Is Best.

The results of five years' tests indicate that for fattening hogs the way to feed alfalfa most satisfactorily is to feed it without molasses or chopping. This method has given faster and cheaper gains than feeding a molasses and alfalfa mixture. Alfalfa is a better feed than molasses. Alfalfa is a better feed than molasses. Alfalfa is a better feed than molasses.

Gathering the Remains.

A good woman's husband was dismembered and eaten by an African tribe. She, desirous of giving him Christian burial, was left no other alternative but that of exterminating, with the assistance of certain accommodation friends armed with the destructive weapons of our advanced civilization, the tribe in question, which had shown such a receptive attitude toward her husband. The bodies of the savages were brought back to civilization by the evening expedition and were placed in one grave, surrounded by a modest slab placed there by the widow and bearing the following inscription: "The remains of the Rev. —, beloved husband of —"

The great calamity in Omaha was quickly overshadowed by the terribly disastrous floods in Ohio. Great suffering and sickness from cattle and exposure resulted. I. Poole, 2217 California street, Omaha, writes: "My daughter had a very severe cough and cold but Foley's Honey and Tar Compound knocked it out in no time." Refuse substitutes. Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

Training Horses' Manes.

When the horse's mane inclines to the wrong side an excellent plan is to make a cover, like the one here shown, to fit closely over the horse's neck. It may be made of heavy muslin or canvas with buttons underneath to fasten it in place. It does not interfere with the bridle or collar. It can be used on the horse as long as it is needed.—Farm and Fireside.

HOUSE COLLAR.

Timely Bee Notes.

It is the wisest folly to try to winter over a weak colony, for it is almost sure to perish, and for this and other reasons give two or more such colonies to give sufficient bees to insure wintering, etc. Just throw them together in one hive; queens and all, and let the bees fight it out themselves as to which queen shall sway the scepter of power.

It is a mooted question as to whether the entrance of the hives should be contracted where bees are to be wintered out of doors. Many experts consider it best to contract the entrances. A ship, for this purpose. It should be so thick over the entrance of the hive as to allow the colony an outlet of one to two inches.

Market Surplus Horses. Avoid keeping too many horses on the farm, get rid of surplus horses if they are not making money. Do not allow them to eat up the profits which the farm makes.

Farm Dairying

De Kol Creamelle, Holstein With Record of 25,250 Pounds of Milk in One Year
XIII.—Difficulties In Churning.

By LAURA ROSE,
 Demonstrator and Lecturer in Dairying
 at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

[Copyright, 1911, by A. C. McCharg & Co.]

ALMOST all the difficulties met with in the dairy can be avoided by wisdom and care, but as they do come it is expedient to know how to meet them. The causes of cream not churning within a reasonable time are various:

First.—Too much cream in the churn.
 If it swells and nearly fills the churn, concussion practically ceases. Remedy:
 Take out half the cream and make two churnings. It will save time, butter and patience. A person is almost a saint who can be good natured at the end of three hours' hard churning.
 Never fill the churn over half full.

Second.—Cream too poor in fat.
 Where there is a large amount of skim-milk in the cream, the fat globules do not have the same concussion or chance of coming in contact and massing together. Such cream requires a high churning temperature to soften the globules, so that with the lessened force and contact they may adhere to each other. Remedy: If the temperature has been low at starting, and it after churning over half an hour there is no sign of butter, pour the greater portion of the cream out into a can or pail, and set it in a vessel of warm water, stir constantly and raise the temperature of the cream eight or ten degrees and return it to the churn.
 This takes but a few minutes. Never add hot water directly to the cream.
 It melts the fat, curdles the casein and produces a pale colored, weak bodied butter with white specks of curd through it.

Cream Poor in Fat.
 If this poor cream comes from pans or deep cans allow the milk to stand longer before skimming and remove the cream more carefully. If from a separator, adjust the screw to take a richer cream, and be careful no water or skimmilk runs into the cream can.
 Remember that cream poor in fat always means a serious loss of butter in the buttermilk.

Third.—Sometimes the butter breaks, but will not gather. It remains like fat but has no body or rounds up like small shot. This is due to one or more of four causes—cream poor in fat, cream cold, cows getting nothing but dry feed and cows milking a long time.

The fat globules in strippers' milk are small and of a hard, tallowy nature, making a high churning temperature necessary. Sometimes there is present in such milk a viscous substance which prevents the massing of the globules. I have known many people lose churning after churning from this cause. To scald such cream while it is sweet heat it to 185 degrees and then cool helps greatly.

A fresh cow coming into the herd has a marked effect in improving the churning of the rest of the cream.

The dry, condensed feed of winter produces butter fat which has a melting point several degrees higher than the fat produced from the succulent green feed of summer. This accounts for the necessarily higher churning temperature in winter. A judicious selection of feeds materially helps the churning. Cottonseed cake, hay and straw tend to harden butter. Linseed cake, silage and roots have the opposite effect and make churning easier.
 Remedy: If there is no sign of the butter gathering after breaking, when you have churned for five minutes slowly or when on looking at the lid
 the granules appear to be rounding up, to churn longer without doing something is useless. Add two or three quarts of water several degrees warmer than the cream. The water dilutes the buttermilk and causes a better separation of the butter. Revolve the churn a few times, let stand a little while, then draw off about half of the buttermilk, straining it through a fine sieve or strainer to catch any particles of butter. The liquid thus reduced and the churning continued; the butter should soon gather into the required sized granules. In cases of very poor cream it may be necessary to reduce the buttermilk further.

Fourth.—Churning in a cold room will lower the temperature sufficiently to retard the coming of the butter.
 Remedy: Warm the cream as before described. Start with the cream warmer than usual under such conditions.

Fifth.—Very rich cream will thicken or "go to sleep" in the churn, and concussion ceases, or nearly so. Remedy:
 All that is necessary is to add water or skimmilk at churning temperature or a little lower to thin the cream, so that it can again fall in the churn.

Sixth.—The very slow revolving of the churn causes unnecessary delay in having the butter come. Remedy:
 Churn as fast as you can, so long as you allow time for the cream to drop.
 The faster the speed the greater the force.

not reach the butter is paler. This defect often results when the butter is soft and the working stopped before the salt is well distributed. It is better to overwork the butter than have the color uneven.

Mottles are usually caused by washing the butter with too cold water and chilling the outside surface of the granules or working it when very dry.
 There are portions of the butter in such cases that are not reached by the salt.

Undissolved salt results from un-enough moisture in the butter to dissolve it or using very coarse salt or having it very cold and the butter firm enough to resist texture. Comes from churning at a high temperature, washing with too warm water, overworking or working with a sliding motion.
 White specks are particles of hardened butter.

First Trip of Season.

The Illinois arrived in port for the first time Saturday night. She was heavily laden with freight, a large amount of which was for this city.

The Missouri is scheduled to leave Chicago next Tuesday on her first trip of the season. During the winter the Illinois has been in dry dock at Manistee where she underwent extension repairs.

DEATH OF DR. SWEET

One of the Most Prominent Physicians in County of Charlevoix.

Had Occupied Many Important Public Positions.—Leaves Wife and Four Children.

Dr. C. A. Sweet, one of Charlevoix county's most prominent physicians and surgeons, died at his home in East Jordan, May 4, after an illness of several years.

Dr. Sweet was born in Marshall, Michigan, July 1860, and graduated from the Illinois Medical University in 1887, locating in Crystal, Montcalm county, where he practiced his profession until 1897, when he located in East Jordan where he soon acquired a large practice.

He served as health officer of East Jordan and was a member of the United States Pension board of this district for a number of years. He was also a member of the Charlevoix County Medical association. In politics he was a Republican and fraternally belonged to the Masons, Odd Fellows, Woodmen and Foresters.

THEATRICAL

Manager Wildern of the Majestic announces as a special for next Saturday night "The Petersburg Stage" in addition to the other attractions at his popular place of amusement.

"The Price."

The Charlevoix theater will have as its attraction on Monday evening May 19 for an engagement of one night only, Edna Marshall in "The Price" which set all New York theatre-goers agog last season by the great strength it developed as a drawing attraction. It far outlived its original booking at the Hudson theatre.

In "The Price," George Broadhurst, its author has drawn characters of very human people, and the story is one which is frank in its appeal to the emotions. A young girl sins and suffers and is all but forgiven by the man she loves who cannot overlook an offense she did not commit, but he believes she did.

The complete cast of "The Price" company are all well known to the Charlevoix public, every member of this excellent company having appeared here in Clarence Bennett's Verile American play "The Squaw Man" on September 18, 1911, also in Mr. Bennett's Royal Slave which has been seen in this city several times.

Miss Edna Marshall and Clarence Bennett will be remembered particularly as having so well taken the parts of Lady Diana and Tabywana, peace chief of the Utes, respectively, in "The Squaw Man."

Manager Loskot desires to announce that "The Price" is positively one of the best attractions he has had the pleasure of playing here.

Manager Loskot of the Charlevoix Theater will present to his patrons a special Vitaphone feature in two reels, "Rip Van Winkle," besides other features next Saturday evening.

BUTLER GAVE FINE ADDRESS

At Meeting of Men's Bible Class Held Last Sunday.

Next Sunday Continuation of a Trip to Panama Will be Given.

Last Sunday Sept. L. A. Butler of Boyne City addressed the Men's Bible Class on "The Trend of Modern Education." The class has looking forward to Mr. Butler's appearance for several months with high anticipation of what he would give them. Those who were present will say that they were not in any way disappointed, but that the address was well worth the hearing and consideration by every person interested in educational matters. The analysis of the educational movement as endorsed by the best educators of the day was masterly and the suggestions and recommendations which he gave were worthy of the most careful consideration by the teachers, parents and school boards.

He made it very plain to us that education to-day is viewed in a very different light from what it was a short time ago and that the demand is continually in the direction of fitting the pupils to fill a useful place in the community and also to enable the pupil to find himself, that is, to discover what he or she is best fitted for. Boyne City and Charlevoix county are to be congratulated in having a man so up to date and conscientious and able in the work of education.

Next Sunday the account of the trip which Don Campbell and Earl Young took to Panama and intervening places will be finished. Those who heard Earl give his experiences Sunday before last will not want to miss the opportunity to hear the conclusion of the account.

Next Sunday also the time of meeting of the class will be taken up and definitely disposed of.

ed curd caused by having the cream too warm, too sour or not frequently and thoroughly stirred while ripening. Scrapings of dried cream or the crust of unstirred cream due to evaporation may cause white flakes in the butter.

Leaky, waterlogged butter is overcharged with moisture from high temperature in churning and washing, gathering the butter into lumps in the wash water and giving it but the minimum amount of working. The maximum amount of water allowed by law is 16 per cent. Butter usually has from 12 to 15 per cent.

Off flavors in butter may be traced to decayed or muddy food—weeds, turnips, etc., overripe cream, impure water, absorption of odors from the atmosphere in the stable or cellar or kitchen, contamination by dirt, sick cows, cows long in milk or keeping butter at too high a temperature or in insanitary surroundings.

Not much butter at the present time is put down for winter use. When the price gets low in summer and the milk supply in winter is scarce it is using foresight to pack a rock or two of butter. June and September are the best months for making butter for winter use. I prefer September, when the cows are on the aftermath and the extreme heat is past.

Extra care should be taken in churning the milk and ripening the cream.

An Aggravated Case. Lord Justice Clerk Eskgrove, in sentencing certain householders, began by explaining the various crimes of which they had been convicted—assault, robbery and larceny, of which last he gave them the etymology. He then reminded them that they had attacked the house and robbed it, and so worked gradually up to the climax. "All this you did, and, God preserve us, just when they were settin' down to their dinner!"—Law Notes.

The Word "Slave." The word "slave" is a word of brilliant historical antecedents. Its original, the Russian "slava," means glory and is the title of that race which subdues the Russian people. But when the Germans reduced hosts of the Slavs to servitude their name, from malice or accident, as Gibbon says, became synonymous with "servile."

Keeping Dogs as Pets. The fashion of keeping little dogs as objects of luxury is not at all modern. Both Greek and Roman women used to have small pet dogs, over which they made as much fuss as does a fashionable lady of today over her poodle.

In essence the new measure is a law requiring that shipments of liquor in local option districts must bear the name of the consignee, name of consignor, amount of liquor in package and purposes for which the liquor is to be used.

Added to all this is still another requirement, directing that railroad companies, expressmen and other transportation agencies must keep a book in which all shipments

LETTER FROM GLOUCESTER

Visit to Boston and Its Historic Places of Interest.

Former Charlevoix Residents Will Soon be Returning Home—Fishing Still Good.

Gloucester, Mass., May 12, 1913

Dear Editor: As we are still here, thought perhaps another letter to your paper would be accepted.

We are having beautiful weather here where the sweet magnolias bloom. The earth is fair in her spring adornment of flowers and green lawns.

The fishing still remains good but we are expecting the dogfish along any time now which puts an end to our famous gillnet fishing here. Then we will be leaving for our Northern Michigan home.

We have visited the famous old city of Boston with its historic old buildings; the Old North Church, where the lantern was hung the night of the midnight ride of Paul Revere, also the Charlestown prison, a few minutes ride on the street car from Boston and the Bunker Hill Monument which towers 221 feet in the air and makes one dizzy to look to the top.

We have enjoyed a winter in the east, but now when we know the weather is fine in our own home state we begin to feel like going north again. We are going to stop at Wolcott, New York, the birthplace of the writer, on our homeward journey and visit old time friends and relatives. We will try and find time to let The Courier hear from us from there. We will also stop at Detroit for a short visit with relatives. We understand that G. C. Geiken leaves soon for Charlevoix and we also hear other former Charlevoix residents talking of going back soon to "Charlevoix. The beautiful and our heart strings are drawing that way.

Leslie Dorrance and wife expect to leave here in about two weeks for Charlevoix. Guess that this will be of interest to your readers. I will bid you adieu.

Mrs. O. A. DORRANCE.

College Will Be Built.

Within a few hours of the launching of the proposition to establish an educational institute in Traverse City for the teaching of business, agriculture and horticulture, which will involve the expenditure of $50,000, $20,000 was subscribed by business men of the city. Other lines will be taught as necessity demands. The plan for a building call for a capacity of 600 students and an experiment farm near the city limits will be provided. The Needham Business college will be merged with the new institution and will be in charge of the present manager, J. E. Coad.

MEMORIAL DAY PROCLAMATION

Decoration and Memorial Day has come to mean more to the American people than any other day set apart for paying tribute to patriotism. It is a day that recalls sacred memories. These memories become more sacred with every added year, because the ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic are becoming thinner and thinner. Those who are with us now will soon join the Grand Army of the Dead. For the earlier Decoration Days have been added new memories of thousands of Spanish American War veterans who laid down their lives for a more glorious America.

Let the people of Michigan make next Decoration Day the most beautiful in all her history. This should not be a day for recreation and amusement but rather a day for consecration. Flowers for the dead betoken a kindly spirit, but flowers for the living of the Grand Army of the Republic are an expression of love and valor.

The thirtieth day of May is set apart for appropriate exercises in every school house and church in Michigan whereby our boys and girls may be encouraged to cherish an abiding love for both our heroic dead and our heroic living.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby issue this my Proclamation and heartily urge the observance of Friday, May 30, 1913, as Decoration and Memorial Day.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, this eighth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-seventh.

By the Governor: Frederick C. Martindale, Secretary of State.

SCHOOL TEXT BOOK BILL

Big Volume of Work Added to Duties of Superintendent Wright.

Governor Ferris has signed the King text book bill and Luther L. Wright, state superintendent of public instruction, has commenced to worry. The text book law has heaved a new burden onto the shoulders of the head of the educational department. It will require the reviewing of every school book in the state by officials of the state superintendent's office.

When the King bill goes into effect, which will be not later than August 15, a library of study volumes will be dumped onto Superintendent Wright. Every publishing company selling books within the state is commanded by the statute to file a sample of each of its school publications with the department of education.

Two companies alone publish some 7,500 books each. Some 15,000 volumes will be turned over to the state by these publishing concerns. Other companies, while not printing on the great scale of the two first named printing houses, will also turn books over to Superintendent Wright, so that a library of at least 20,000 volumes of school books will have to be established.

Provisions of the King measure regulates the sale of school books used in all public schools of Michigan.

BIG CROWD OF PRISONERS

Sheriff Robbins Arrives in City Friday Morning With Big Bunch.

Seven Lumber Jacks Jump Their Jobs and Land in County Jail.

Swift justice was meted out by Justice W. A. Davoll of Boyne Falls Thursday afternoon to seven Chicago men who jumped their jobs while employed by Cobbs & Mitchell. Their scheme to beat the company out of money advanced for their transportation ended with jail sentences.

A bunch of laborers was brought in from Chicago Wednesday morning. They were taken to camp by J. W. Locke, foreman, who had a special breakfast prepared for them.

"Turn in boys and have a good sleep," said Locke when the travelers had eaten heartily.

The bunch "hit the straw" and did not wake up until suppertime. Then they had another good meal and more sleep.

Breakfast over Thursday morning, orders were issued for the men to get busy on railroad construction. Some of the boys didn't relish the idea of building roads and seven of them promptly went on strike.

Arrived at Boyne Falls they bought tickets for Gaylord. As they were about to board the train, the seven were arrested and brought before Justice Davoll. He read act No. 105 laws of 1913, which covered their case in which they were attempting to defraud the lumber company out of $750 advanced for their transportation. The court scene ended with the justice imposing a sentence of 30 days in the county jail.

HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETIC MEET

Will Be Held Next Saturday at Maple Park, Boyne City.

Big Crowd Will Be Present from Charlevoix and East Jordan.

The County High School athletic meet to be held at Maple Park, Boyne City, on the 21st will draw in several respects from the ordinary high school meet. First it will bring into the competition at least 95 per cent of all the high school boys of the three towns and second all of these boys will participate in a list of events that will tend toward all-round development rather than such developments as comes through specializing in the dashes, the weight events or the jumps.

The events will begin at 10:00 a. m. and will continue through the afternoon with an hour and a half intermission at the noon hour. The following is the forenoon program: shot, put, standing broad jump, running broad jump, running high jump, baseball throw, one hundred yard dash. All of the foregoing events will be participated in by all entries. The following afternoon events are known as special events and the different entries have a choice of anyone besides a

There is more Church in this section of the country than in any other. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven that it is a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Bull's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and imparts strength to the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. The Siege of the Seven Suitors

MEREDITH NICHOLSON

CHAPTER XXIV.

Hezekiah Partitions the Kingdom.

AS I came perspiring out of the telephone booth I found the suitors engaged in subdued debate by the hearth. They could hardly have heard my blarney over the telephone, but they were greatly concerned about something. Shullenberger, who was apparently the only one willing to approach me, followed me to the veranda.

"Those fellows in there don't understand this. Dick told us last night, after we had called at the house and been refused admittance, that Miss Cecilia was ill with diphtheria. I remember that it was Dick who rung the bell and gave our cards to the footman. It was quite singular, you know, our being turned away, unless something had been wrong."

I bowed gravely. They had been turned away for the very simple reason that after unearthing Adoniram Caldwell's efforts in the secret rooms of her house Miss Octavia had not cared to be troubled with suitors. The haughty Nebuchadnezzar had drawn upon his imagination for the rest.

"And I understood you to say a moment ago that Miss Hollister's malady is not diphtheria, but chickenpox?" Shullenberger persisted with almost laughable trepidation. "These gentlemen, I regret to say, go so far as to doubt your word."

"That, Mr. Shullenberger, is their privilege. But it seems to me that when I merely tried to mitigate the terrible news imparted by Dick you are rank ingrates for questioning my far less doubtful story. Anything between you gentlemen and Mr. Dick is, of course, none of my affair, for whether considered as a set, group or bunch I am done with the whole lot of you. Farewell!"

I decided as I rode away that nothing was to be gained by going in search of Wiggins. Orton had purposely made his house difficult of access, and the roads in that neighborhood are many and devious. Orton had banished his ghosts that he might think with his play in peace and, knowing his temper, I was sure that Wiggins and the rest of them would keep out of his way till the rains of hunger drove them back.

I had ridden half a mile toward Hopfield when I espied a woman riding rapidly toward me, and as she drew nearer I identified her as Hezekiah. Hezekiah rode astride, as a woman should, her bicycle skirt serving well as a habit. She rode as a boy rides who loves freedom and quickness; pulses and the rush of wind across his face. She was hatless, for which the sun and I were both grateful. The lightning bolt at the back of her head turned the dim back to sixteen.

She drew rein and fished what seemed to be suited almonds from her sweater pocket. She dipped one of these into the air and caught it in her mouth with a lazy toss of the head that showed the firm contour of her lovely throat. I had never seen her more self-possessed.

"Do you care much for this horse?" she asked carelessly.

"It's a good horse. I fancy Miss Octavia thinks so herself. There are places, Hezekiah, where they hang people for horse stealing."

"Thought I might need one today, as I borrowed him through the back way to the old red barn. The coachman is an ancient chum, and Aunt Octavia would never mind even if she knew. And she will know, all right! Anyhow, my rear had been pitched once too often, and there is a satisfaction in a horse. Where's our sensitive and impressionable Wiggins? Saw him riding over toward Klean yesterday p. m. with chin on his chest—dreadful riding form."

"Wiggins is at Orton's—the piny-wright's, you know. I've telephoned him to hustle back, but he's out of our reach somewhere. I couldn't speak to him direct; had to leave a message for him."

"Just like Wiggins to die on the last lap. What did you make out of Brother Pepperton?"

"Your note scared me—thanks so much for your note—but he's all right. Engaged to another girl."

"Ah," she sighed. "It's comforting that Cecilia couldn't keep them all going all the time."

We rode along together, our horses in a walk, and I told her everything I knew of the condition of affairs, including a true account of my experiences at the inn the day before and of the finding of the old cheat belonging to Wiggins' great-grandfather—her brown eyes opened wide at this—concluding with the diphtheria stratagem and Dick's menace to Cecilia's happiness.

"He's really a bright little boy. Coming home on the steamer he gave me a just graduate course in pragmatism that I've found helpful in keeping house for papa. It's too bad we have to lay a trap for Mr. Dick."

"Is it? Just how are we to manage that, Hezekiah?"

"Oh, that will be easy enough. He's pretty desperate, and since the compact between the suitors has gone to pieces he knows he will have to show his hand pretty soon. He thinks you are wild about Cecilia. He lays great stress on his thinking powers, and he probably argues that you are bound to pop pretty soon. It's just as well he thinks so, but we must finish this up today. I'll be a nervous wreck if we don't close the books tonight. There's your friend Dick now."

She indicated a high point in the main road, where it crossed the ridge from which she had shown me—seemingly, oh, very long ago—the session of suitors—meeting the staid Dick, mounted, was galloping off across the fields toward Hopfield. Man horse were so distant as to create the illusion of an equestrian statue on a high pedestal.

"Napoleon before Waterloo," I suggested.

"He does look like Napoleon, doesn't he?" she laughed. "He's a bit fussed today. He knows that Wiggins' not at the inn and that you are up to something, and to little Mr. Dick the architect probably looks like one of those mysterious knights you read about, who suddenly appears at the tournament all armed in an ice cream freezer, with a tin pall over his head. Mr. Pepperton's presence no doubt worries him, as I don't think they ever met Cecilia and Mr. Pepperton are riding. I doctored them just before I struck you, walking their horses in the most love-like fashion in a line over your door, but if Mr. Pepperton is really engaged it's all right, though if I was the other girl I think I'd be anxious."

"Here's playing the game, that's all. What are you going to do now?"

She glanced at the sun. I fancied that it was with such a scanning of the heavens that her sisters a thousand years before had noted the time.

"This is my plea day. There's undoubtedly a gooseberry pie waiting for me at the luncheon. And papa will expect me for luncheon. I'd ask you to come too, only you'll have all you can do to keep Mr. Dick from persuading somebody to be the sixth man, so he can slip in as number seven. If we get through today all right, you may come for luncheon tomorrow, maybe. Papa told me he liked you. He said you were very decent that night you met him."

"My compliments to your father. I hope to be able to persuade him to extend his paternal arm to include me. Aunt Octavia must be my aunt too."

"Really?" cried Hezekiah, with indecent merriment, and she wheeled her horse and was gone like the wind.

Luncheon at Hopfield passed with out incident, and afterward Cecilia retired to help her aunt with her correspondence, while Pepperton and I lounged about the house and smoked. I told him of my ineffectual efforts to reach Wiggins, and he volunteered to find a motor and search for him, but I pointed out the futility of this, and renewed my appeal that he stay on guard at Hopfield.

At about 3 o'clock Cecilia reappeared. Her color was high and her eyes were unusually brilliant. I knew that she fully realized that the crisis was near, but she asked no questions, and her manner reassured me of her confidence. We lided on the stone terrace above the frost-scented garden.

"We were hardly seated before Dick entered the garden, followed immediately by the six other suitors I had last seen at the inn. They ranged themselves on a stone bench facing the house at the end of one of the paths. They wore sack coats and hats in a variety of styles, so that they did not present quite the bizarre effect produced by their frock coats and silk ties. They surveyed the house sadly; bowed their heads upon their sticks and seemed to have come to stay. The siege had become a practical matter.

"Napoleon before Waterloo," I suggested.

"Why don't the gentlemen come in?" asked Cecilia, peering through the vines.

"Hush! There's a rumor that you're terribly ill. They've come merely to pay their tribute of respect by waiting in the garden. You had better go quietly into the house. The shock of seeing you in your usual health must be too much for them."

"But I can't. I must be accessible at all times," she cried, looking helplessly from me to Pepperton, who was all at sea for an explanation. "If that injunction is absurd I shall appear at once."

"Then you and Pepperton must patrol the terrace here. You are lovers for all I know. Ignore them utterly in your absorption with one another. If any one approaches you, Pepperton, ask Miss Hollister to marry you."

"Me?" gasped Pepperton.

"No. It can't be done that way," Cecilia interposed. "Mr. Pepperton has told me of his engagement. I can't be party to a fraud—a trick. I can't countenance it at all. It would ruin everything."

"Then stay right here. Face back and forth and I'll manage the rest. I don't for the life of me know how, but I'll do it."

Pepperton and Cecilia stepped out on the terrace and Cecilia lifted her head. The suitors of amaze ment looked on and caught a feeling of being back tearing through the house, as his late companion's muffled voice in the distance.

I ran to the stable and found a horse, feeling that I must be in a position to move rapidly if I saw Wiggins approaching. If Dick enuded his wrathful pursuers he would be on the lookout somewhere, awaiting his own time, and if he saw Wiggins rushing nimbly for the house he might yet circumvent us.

I satisfied myself that Cecilia and Pepperton were still plainly visible from the garden, and I knew that for the time she was safe. I galloped the high point in the road from which Hezekiah and I had observed Dick on guard at noon and waited. Remembering the fine figure the philosopher had made against the sky, I dismounted and rested by a stone wall where I could watch with less risk of being seen from a distance.

I at once saw matters that interested me immensely. Dick had thrown off the other suitors and was rapidly crossing the fields toward Hopfield. When I caught sight of him he was just leaving the orchard where Hezekiah and I had held our memorable interview. A long stretch of rough pasture lay before him, and he settled down to a quick trot. He took several fences without lessening his gait, crossed the stile like a dash a little later and was out of sight.

As I turned to my horse I heard the swift patter of hoofs and saw a man, and woman galloping furiously toward me. They were rapidly ascending the ridge, and their horses were springing over the firm white road in prodigious leaps. Wiggins had got my message. Hezekiah had met him in the road and was urging him on. As they came nearer I saw that Wiggins had taken fire at last.

"Orton said some one was killed—who—what—who?"

"I just picked him up five minutes ago. He doesn't know anything," said Hezekiah, "and you haven't told him. Remember the rules. What's doing?" she inquired coolly.

CHAPTER XXV.

The Seventh Man.

HEZEKIAH hale Wiggins exchanged horses with her, and while he was readjusting the saddle girths I explained to Hezekiah the situation at Hopfield and told her of Dick's scamper across the fields.

"There's no use fooling with this thing any more. I'll take Wiggins to the house and lock him up until I've been numbered six. It's safest."

"Not much it isn't. I don't intend that Cecilia shall have the pleasure of refusing you."

"I'd like to know why not. It's only to fill the gap."

"Oh," said Hezekiah, "that would be an embarrassment to me all the rest of my life. Listen carefully. Take Wiggins in by the back way and give him a picture book to look at. Leave Cecilia alone on the terrace when you're all ready and see what happens. If Dick's on his way to the house he's going to do something, and he must feel the edge of my displeasure. I owe him a few on general principles."

"What does all this mean? You say there's nothing wrong at the house?" began Wiggins as we left Hezekiah, and started toward Hopfield.

"Nothing whatever the matter. Everything perfectly all right, but you've got to keep mum now and do what I tell you. I've worked hard for you, old man, and when it's all over I'm going to send you a bill for professional services. Come."

I urged my horse to his utmost, and Wiggins rode steadily beside me. The freight Orton had given him had done my friend good, and I felt that I was dealing with a live man at last.

"I'll tell you all about this after we have a good night's sleep tonight."

We rode direct to the stable, and I took Wiggins to my room by the back stairs and bade him help himself to my raiment. He was perfectly tractable, and I was glad to see that he trusted implicitly to my guidance.

I met Miss Octavia in the lower hall. She was just in from the kennels.

"I hope, Arnold, that you have not been without entertainment. By the way, if you should by any chance see Hezekiah you will kindly intimate to her that if she returns that mare she borrowed this morning in reasonably good condition I will overlook her indiscretion in taking it from the stable without permission."

"She did not wait for a reply, but continued on to her room, and I went direct to the terrace. Cecilia and Pepperton were just galloping into the house to look up a book or piece of music which they had been discussing. Cecilia was looking herself interesting, as she so well knew how to do, and she seemed in no wise anxious.

"We had forgotten tea," she said. "Aunt Octavia has just ordered it."

"She and Mr. Pepperton may have their tea. I believe the air outside will do you good for a little longer—so if you don't mind, Pepperton, Miss Hollister will resume her promenade alone."

Pep has told me since that he thought me quite mad that afternoon. I bade Cecilia patrol the long terrace slowly. She turned up the collar of the covert coat and obeyed, laughing a little nervously, but asking no questions. The scene could not have been more charmingly set. The great house loomed darkly behind her; beneath lay the garden, over which the dusk was stealing goldenly.

She paused suddenly as I watched from the window, and I stepped out to see what had attracted her attention. There into the garden from its farthest entrance filed the six suitors who had previously come to sit beneath the windows of their stricken lady. Having failed to visit their wrath upon the perfidious Dick they had rhimed their clothes and returned to Hopfield. If Hezekiah had not expressly commanded me not to become the sixth man, I should have offered myself on the spot and waited only until Cecilia had made the inevitable answer before summoning Wiggins to end the whole affair. Such, however, was not to be the order of events.

The procession, headed by Ormsby, was within a few yards of the terrace. Cecilia, apparently unconscious of their proximity, continued her promenade. In a moment she must recognize them, ask them into the house, give them

THREW THE MIKADO.

The Wrestler Who Wanted to Humble
 the Ruler of Japan.

Many anecdotes are still told in Japan about the late mikado, all of which are calculated to strengthen the admiration held for the deceased monarch on account of his benevolence and emphatic, as well as his wisdom.
 At one time wrestling was a favorite pastime at the Japanese court and his majesty was able with ease to throw all the court attendants and officials.
 One man, however, Yamaoka Tetsu-taro, was very anxious to throw the emperor because he was afraid that the latter might become too proud of his prowess in that and other sports.
 Finally the emperor challenged Yamaoka, and the latter threw the sovereign with great force.

The monarch, so the story goes, was not too pleased at the defeat, but was too good a sportsman to say anything.
 Later Yamaoka resigned his position as court attendant, and the emperor had defeated the emperor for the good of the throne and the country, yet in doing so he had subjected his sovereign to a heinous indignity. The monarch, however, absolutely refused to accept the resignation, saying:
 "You have done well to show that the ring is no respecter of persons and I appreciate your loyal spirit in beating me." At all events Yamaoka was in high favor at court thereafter.—

MAKES NIAGARA A DWARF.

A Waterfall in British Guiana That Is 822 Feet High.

The Kaitum waterfall, in British Guiana, is the highest waterfall in the world. It is of unsurpassed grandeur and beauty, as the Potaro river, unobstructed at its brink by islands of huge masses of rock, hurls itself in full flood into a great abyss.

Peering over the precipitous and sheer rocky face, within 100 feet of this avalanche of water, is an awe inspiring experience. The total height of the fall is 822 feet, or five times that of Niagara, which boasts only 161 feet. The fall is generally seen at the dry season, and consequently the name Kaitum means "Old Man's fall" and was so called after an old man who lived in an Indian village years ago.

One day the natives, exasperated at the old man's bad temper, put him into a boat and let the boat carry him over the falls. The boat was, tradition says, turned to stone and is now a large rock at the foot of the falls while the old man's ghost haunts the spot at night, and no Indian will approach. The fall, if harnessed, could generate a horsepower of 1,204,864.—

A King in Disguise.

A ruler who journeyed to the scene of his inauguration in disguise was the king of Roumania. Prince Charles of Hohenzollern traveled to Bucharest in 1896 in defiance of the powers which war between Prussia and Austria was imminent. In Switzerland he had a passport made out in the name of "Karl Hettigen," going to Odessa on business with a special note recording that Herr Hettigen wore spectacles.
 At the Austrian frontier a customs official demanded his name, and the prince had forgotten it. Happily Counselor Von Werner, who accompanied him, had the presence of mind to create a diversion by insisting upon paying duty for some cigars and meanwhile the prince consulted his passport.
 So he proceeded safely on his second class journey.—London Chronicle

Strenuous Chivalry.

It is complained that modern conditions are killing "the chivalry of the middle ages." But medieval tales and romances show what that chivalry really was. Wife beating was a common incident on the part of those knights and gentlemen whose gallantry was a mere convention. The Chevalier de la Tour-Landry in his book of counsels to his daughters tells them the story of a woman who used to contradict her husband in public. One day after expostulating in vain, he knocked her down, then kicked her face and broke her nose. "And so," commented the good chevalier, "she was disfigured for life, and thus, through her ill behavior and bad temper, she had her nose spoiled, which was a great misfortune to her." But not a word is said about the husband's brutality.

Nice Discrimination.

That her two grandmothers did not hold quite the same place in her esteem was indicated by Mildred, a little girl of eight years, after she had heard the story of Little Red Riding Hood.
 "Oh, dear me!" said Mildred, "I just couldn't stand it to have my Grand-mamma Ryce eaten up by a wolf, and I could hardly stand it to have my Grandmamma Turner eaten up by one!"—Woman's Home Companion.

She's One.

"I'd like to get a little runabout if I could afford one."
 "I know how you could get one for the asking."
 "How?"
 "Ask our next door neighbor's daughter to marry you."—London Mail.

A Cruel Thrust.

"Tis true you see me in reduced circumstances now, but I once rode in my own carriage."
 "He" explained him of the story's heart. "I can't have been before you learned to walk."—Birmingham

MURDER AT HARBOR SPRINGS

Mrs. Orville Ferguson Kills Husband and Commits Suicide.

Jealously The Motive For The Double Crime—Leaves Only Daughter.

As he stood before the dresser in the sleeping room, apparently in the act of changing his collar, Mrs.
 Orville Ferguson of Harbor Springs shot her husband in the temple, Monday night.

Ferguson dropped to the floor, dying in a few moments. As he lay dying his wife lay down on the bed and fired two shots into her temple, killing herself instantly. The bodies were discovered by their fourteen year old daughter Velma.

Mr. Ferguson, aged 33, was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Ferguson, and had resided in Harbor Springs all his life. At the time of his death he was freight cashier of the G. R. & L. railroad and had held the position of Village Clerk.

It is thought that Miss Ferguson committed the crime while insane from jealousy.

Will Be On Bay View Assembly Program Again
 This Year.

Close behind our earliest spring arrivals, the birds, comes the beau-of the assembly and of popular summer university work.

For many seasons past people have been saving at the close of each assembly, "Can there ever be brought still finer talent in music, and this summer will be no exceped for this season leads one to wonder if the climax has not been reached. It would require a column to barely mention the interesting things we are to have this year, for talent of the highest order appears all through the Bulletin.

Attention is arrested in a hasty glance by three names of international fame, William J. Burns, the great detective, Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heineke, the celebrated contralto, and Helen Keller, the best known woman in the world. It is predicted that this year people will stream to Bay View as never before.

SESSION IS ENDED Many Important Measures Were Passed by the Last Legislature.

With a record of having proposed more changes to the fundamental laws of the state than any preceding legislature, the Michigan lawmakers adjourned sine die last Friday. It had been in session four and one-half months. About 1,000 bills were introduced in that time. Less than one-quarter of the number were deemed worthy of consideration, the other three-fourths having been tabled.

A chorus of yelps and barks, as of dogs suddenly released, greeted my ear. The oncoming suitors heard it, too, and the line wobbled uncertainly. Then round the house swept unbidden hounds, terriers—a collection of prize winners such as few kennels ever boasted—loping gayly in uninvited freedom toward unknown and forbidden pastures.

The vanguard of fox terriers leaped down into the garden, with the rest of the pack at their heels. Happy dogs to find grown men ready for a gambol! Four of the suitors found one of the proper exits into the road; two leaped the fox hedge on the other side without shaking a leaf.

I ran round the house, stumbling through the rear guard of the transient canines and passing the kennel master, who had rallied the stable men and was in hot pursuit.

"Somebody turned 'em out—turned 'em out!" he shouted and swept proudly by. The gate of the kennel yard stood open. A familiar figure running low, paused and then sprang nimbly along the paddock fence. A white sweater was distinguishable for a moment on a stone wall, then it followed a pair of enchanted heels into oblivion.

Time had been passing swiftly, and the shadows were deepening. I traced my steps toward the terrace, hearing the cries of pursued and pursuers growing fainter. I had not yet gained a position from which I could see Cecilia, when a man appeared some distance ahead of me, walking guardedly in one of the garden paths. He came uncertainly, pausing a glance about, yet evidently led toward the terrace by a definite purpose. At may be fair in love and war, but I confess to a feeling of pity for John Stewart Dick as I watched him slowly advancing to his fate. He was pale, boldy now, and I felt a sudden like for him, nor can I believe that he was other than a manly fellow with some brains and a good heart.

I reasoned as I marked his approach to the terrace that he had been loitering in the neighborhood, probably watching Cecilia and Pepperton, and when the architect retired he had assumed that the sixth man had not. The appearance of his former comrades of the inn left me dubious as to the resourceful Headlam, they had been routed, and the coast was clear.

I watched him draw nearer to Cecilia as I have watched deer go down to a lake to drink. He would speak now, I was confident of it, and I stole round to the side entrance and sent word to Wiggins to go to the drawing room and wait for me.

Miss Octavia and Pepperton still lingered over their tea. The low nude by the fireplace from her knees had not, it seemed, penetrated to the library, and Miss Octavia bade me join the talk, which had to do, I remember, with some project for a national hall of fame that had incurred her characteristic displeasure. A hall of immortal rascals in pillories she thought far likelier to please the masses.

In fifteen minutes I saw Cecilia crossing the hall. She stopped where I could see her quite plainly and thrust her hand into the pocket of her coat. Out flashed the silver notebook. She made a swift notation with the pencil, that now, I knew, wrote the fate of the sixth man.

I went out and spoke to her and walked beside her to the drawing room door, where Hartley Wiggins was waiting.

Miss Octavia had risen when I returned to the library, and it was time to dress for dinner.

"Just a moment, Miss Hollister. Something of great interest is about to occur." And I made excuses for detaining her for perhaps five minutes not more.

"You have never yet declared me Arnold Ames, and such is my confidence in you that if you tell me that something interesting will soon occur I have no reason to doubt you. It is worth remembering, however, that I am not improved by prolonged roasting."

I heard Wiggins laugh in the hall, and Miss Octavia raised her head. Then Cecilia came into the room and walked directly to her aunt.

"Aunt Octavia, here is the little silver notebook you gave me in Paris. I have just written Mr. Wiggins' name in it, and as I have no further use for the book, I return it with my love and thanks."

Without a word Miss Octavia turned to the wall and pressed the button twice.

"William," she said as the butler appeared, "you may serve Oriana '97." And he turned and disappeared.

Hezekiah and I built our bungalow in the orchard where on that October afternoon I found her munching a red apple on the stone wall. She is the most scrupulous of housewives and only now took me to task for scattering the hearth with fragments of the notes from which this narrative has been written. She has just been reading these last pages with meditative brown eyes and not without occasionally reaching for the pen and retouching some sentence in which, she says, soot from my chimney-doctoring days has clogged the ink. Cecilia and Wiggins live at Hopefield across the fields. Miss Octavia insisted on this, for the reason that the sword of Hartley's great grandfather, found in the chest under the old house, gives him inalienable rights to the premises. Miss Octavia and her brother Bassford are traveling abroad and enjoying those mild adventures to which they are both temperamentally inclined.

"William," she said, "you may serve Oriana '97."

My name is joined to Pepperton's on his office door. Pepperton proposed this arrangement, with so many assurances of faith in me that I could not refuse him; but I knew well enough that Miss Octavia had first put it into his head. So while I have called myself a chimney doctor in these pages, I am again an architect.

"You ought to say something more about the Aspidochelone," Hezekiah has just murmured at my shoulder. "Everybody will ask whether we ever went back there."

"Of course we go back there. Hezekiah, every time you come to town and can get hold of me."

"You'd better explain that Aunt Octavia started the tea room and still owns it and makes money out of it though she rarely goes there, for sends Freda, the maid, to collect the profits. And it won't do any harm to say that when she met you there that day she decided at once that you would be a proper husband for me. Any one who reads your book will want to know that."

Hezekiah is always right. So here, endeth the chronicle.

THE END.

The Donjon.

The donjon, or keep, of the castle was a tower within, much stronger than the rest of the structure and designed as a last resort for the garrison when the walls and other portions of the fortification had fallen into the hands of the enemy. The donjon was generally provided with a secret exit, a tunnel being constructed, often many hundreds of yards in length, leading to some concealed outlet through which the besieged could receive succor or, in time of necessity, escape.

NEW POSTAL RULING MADE

Effects the Mailing and Sending of Post Cards.

Will Be Returned to Sender—None Will Be Sent to Dead Office.

A new ruling, which will eliminate the trouble caused postoffices and the postal department by the returning of some 12,000,000 post cards to the dead letter office annually, has been passed and will go into immediate effect. Heretofore it has been the custom to transmit all cards which were not properly addressed or stamped to the dead office. There was no ruling which provided for the return of defective cards to the mailer as is the case in first class matter. Under the new ruling, however, cards upon which the return address is stamped may be returned to the person mailing them, provided they are returned from this office. Outside cards addressed to persons whom the local authorities are unable to locate will be destroyed after being held for two weeks, instead of being sent to the dead office. If mailed without a stamp they will be forwarded upon receipt of the postage. All cards which are not addressed and cannot be returned to the owner will be destroyed.

You will be satisfied if you get Moyer to hang your paper or do your painting or decorating. Leave orders at Central drug store, or call at 1207 Bridge street. All work guaranteed.—Adv. 181f

INTERESTING DESCRIPTION

Given Bible Class by Don Campbell of Return Trip from Panama.

Next Sunday Rev. Taggeri Will Address the Class—Meeting Hour Permanently Fixed.

Last Sunday Don Campbell finished the relation of the experiences of himself and Earl Young on their trip to Panama, Don giving the experiences on the return trip, naming the different ports at which they stopped in South America and the Caribbean Islands and describing their impression of each. The experiences he narrated were very interesting, some of them very humorous but all instructive, giving the class something of a realization of life in the tropics and some glimpse of the contrast between conditions there and here. The class showed their appreciation of the talk Don gave them by their close attention and appreciative applause.

It is a matter of congratulation to these two young men that they were able to take in an experience which it will not be possible to duplicate and the class were fortunate in being able to secure from them the excellent account of their trip.

Next Sunday Rev. C. E. Taggeri, the pastor of the Congregational church will address the class. The hour of meeting was fixed at five o'clock for a permanent arrangement.

Notice.

I, Henry D. Marshall, Fire Warden for the city of Charlevoix do hereby make the special rule as follows: I do hereby deem the old wooden building located on X's lot 2 in block H in the village of Charlevoix, Michigan, owned by Frank Bixby to be a menace to the public safety on account of fire, and I do hereby direct that the said Frank Bixby shall remove all of said wooden building from said lot on or before the 24th day of June A. D. 1913, otherwise the provisions of Ordinance No. 19 of the city of Charlevoix regarding violations of said ordinance will be enforced. This special rule to be published in official newspaper two weeks.

Charlevoix Contestants Victors in All Leading Athletic Events.

AT BOYNE CITY SATURDAY

Ned Durance Captures the Gold Medal Prize with 410 Points.

Grammar Grade Athletic Contest Monday Was Exciting—Nineteen Win Honor Standard Badges.

From every stand point, except that of the weather, the first annual county high school meet held at Boyne City Saturday was a pronounced success and created a good deal of enthusiasm amongst the contestants and the representatives from the three schools. The morning events scheduled to begin at 10:00 had to be delayed until after eleven owing to the late arrival of the Charlevoix contestants so it was impossible to complete the program until nearly six in the afternoon and during the larger part of the afternoon it was necessary to pull off the events in the rain which made the track almost impassable for a person walking, not to mention any one who was attempting to run a race in decent time. At the conclusion of the afternoon events the school prizes and the individual prizes were awarded as follows:

First place banner to Charlevoix with a school score of 196 points.

Second place banner to Boyne City with a school score of 172.

The badge standard banner was awarded to Charlevoix, that school having the largest proportion of contestants scoring fifty points or better (the badge standard) in each event. The four Charlevoix badge standard winners were E. Krulik, N. Durance, A. Taylor and W. Genett. The others to win the bronze badge standard medals were Carlyle Glezen of Boyne City and Alfred Blake of East Jordan.

Ned Durance of Charlevoix was the highest point winner, scoring 410 points, and received the gold medal.

Fred Erfourth of Boyne City scored the second highest number of points, 376 and was awarded the silver medal.

Edward Krulik of Charlevoix (366 points) and Nelle Miles (317 points) of East Jordan were the next highest point winners.

The silver medals awarded to the winners of special events were awarded as follows:

Ned Durance of Charlevoix, Pole Vault, 8 ft.

Stanley Risk of East Jordan, Discus, 80 ft. 3 in.

Walter Dow of Boyne City, Mile, 5 min. 36.3 sec.

Clare Dunbar of Boyne City, 1/2 Mile, 2 min. 24 sec.

Albert Taylor of Charlevoix, 220 Dash, 25.5 sec.

Fred Erfourth of Boyne City, 440 Dash, 1 min. 2.5 sec.

Both half mile relay races were won by representative of the Charlevoix school. The first, for boys weighing 125 lbs. and under, was run in 1 min. 33.45 sec. The second, for boys weighing 126 lbs. or over was run in 1 min. 48 sec. The time for both races was fast when the condition of the track is taken into consideration.

The two relay cups awarded for these races will be contested for each year until one school has won them three times.

The County Y. M. C. A. grammar grade athletic contest for Charlevoix was pulled off at the golf grounds Monday afternoon.

It proved to be the best and most exciting of the county contests, up-to-date.

Under the Y. M. C. A. plan every boy not physically disqualified, must take part in the several events of his right class.

There were 35 boys of the grammar grade taking part, 19 of them winning the honor standard badge.

The county Y. M. C. A. secretary, Mr. Hall, in planning for the meet ordered only 6 honor badges for Charlevoix and was obliged to re-order 13 more after the score.

The only other grammar grade meet for city schools was held at Boyne City two weeks ago. In this contest 3 boys out of 216, won the honor standard badges. The Charlevoix boys have had the benefit of play grounds and two weeks longer for practice.

The honor standard badge winners for Charlevoix were:

Dick Hammet
Franklin McFarlane
Clarence Thompson
H. Hugbee
Delbert Wyer
Kenneth Usher
Walter Anderson
Carl Holschick
Harold Byers
Brown Felts
Willie Hampton
Russell Schweitzer
Franklin Weaver
Gerald Parsons

BIG MEETING AT EAST JORDAN

Lady Maccabees Form County Organization Thursday of Last Week.

New Meeting of This Association Will be Held in Charlevoix the First of October.

The county rally of the L. O. T. M. held at East Jordan Thursday was a big success, a large crowd attending from this city. Dinner was served in the K. P. hall to over a hundred after which the crowd returned to the Maccabee hall, where the representatives of six lives—Boyne City, Charlevoix, Frankfort, Detroit, Ironton and East Jordan—participated in the pleasing program which was much enjoyed. The meeting was called to order by the Sororal Hives from East Jordan, who exemplified the initiatory service.

A Charlevoix County L. O. T. M. association was then organized and Mrs. Mary Baker of Boyne City unanimously elected commander. Mrs. Alva Barry of East Jordan, was chosen lieutenant commander; Mrs. Cynthia Gates of Boyne City, secretary, and Mrs. Lydia Alcock of Charlevoix, treasurer. The next meeting of this association will be held at Charlevoix on October 1st.

The program was then continued by the White Rose Hives of Charlevoix, who exemplified the initiatory work.

The Myrtle Linwood Hives of Boyne City executed a very pretty fancy drill after which Mary E. Timinery, the second member of the great executive body of the L. O. T. M. gave a brief talk on the "Progress of the Order."

The East Jordan lodge then closed the meeting and after a bountiful supper, the visiting hives departed for their different homes, with many declarations of having spent a most enjoyable day.

SCHOOL CONCERT

Will be Given by Seventh and Eighth Grades on Thursday Evening.

A school concert will be given at the Charlevoix Theater, Thursday evening, May 29, by the students of the seventh and eighth grades.

A fine program has been arranged, the leading feature of which is the cantata, King Rene's Daughter. Patrons of our schools are especially urged to attend and mark the progress in music made by the pupils during the past year.

YOUNG FARMER IS ARRESTED

At Boyne City Friday Charged With Passing Bad Check.

Admits His Guilt—Was Brought to County Jail
Friday Afternoon May 23.

L. G. Olmstead, who gives his age as 19 years but looks older, was arrested Friday morning by Deputy Sheriff George Houghton near Deer Lake, charged with passing a fraudulent check. He was brought to this city and lodged in jail. He admitted his offense.

The check complained of was for $40. Olmstead turned over $30 to the officer.

The fraudulent check was cashed by a local business man. It was detected when it reached the First National bank Friday. Although the signature was a fair imitation of the original, Samuel Bricker, whose name was signed to the check, was called up. Bricker is a farmer living near Bricker'sville, 12 miles southeast of Boyne City, Antrim county. The check was made payable to Ernest Carson. Bricker stated that he had not issued the check.

An hour and a half from the time the forgery was discovered and less than an hour after he was notified, Deputy Sheriff Houghton had picked up his man at the foot of Deer Lake and had him locked in the city jail.

Young Olmstead was driving towards town in a buggy when the deputy sheriff met him and ordered him into his auto.

"I was just going to town to see if I couldn't straighten up that matter," said Olmstead. "Here is $30 of the money I received on the check," and he turned over the money.

S. E. Edelstein of the Hub, states that Olmstead presented him with a check to cash but as he did not like the look of the paper which was somewhat mussed, he gave Olmstead a fresh blank check to have it filled out. It was this blank check, it is claimed, that Olmstead used to unlawfully get $40.

Young Olmstead says he passed the fraudulent check to get a pair of shoes. His father has a 40 acre farm in Antrim county, 10 miles south of Boyne City. The family is in lowly circumstances. The young man worked at odd jobs.—Boyne City Journal, May 23.

Olmstead was brought to this city Friday afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Houghton and arranged before Justice Collins. He pleaded guilty and was bound over to the circuit court.

GOING TO THE FRONT

Hubert Paddock and Clarence Bridge Winning Success in Life's Work.

Mrs. A. F. Bridge and Mrs. R. W. Paddock left this week for Annapolis where they will attend the commencement exercises at the United States Naval Academy where Mrs. Paddock's son, Hubert is a cadet. After seeing Hubert off on his summer's cruise.

They will spend a short time in Washington, from there they will go to Schenectady, New York, where Mrs. Bridge's son Clarence is attending Union College. This is Clarence's last year there and he will enter the employ of the General Electric Manufacturing company of that city, after which he will attend college another year when he will be able to receive the M. E. E. degree in electrical engineering.

Killed at Escanaba.

Word was received last Wednesday that Joe Papineau had been killed at the Escanaba ore docks. Mr. Papineau was a brother of the Papineaus of this city, who had not heard from him in thirteen years.

He occupied the position of foreman of the Escanaba ore docks, and in some way fell into one of the empty baskets of the chute for loading ore, receiving fatal injuries.

At the Majestic.

The Champion-Richmond Stock Company at the Majestic this week are giving good satisfaction. Their engagement will continue all the week with a change of play each night.

ADJOURNED UNTIL JUNE 2

Several Important Cases Will Then be Tried in Circuit Court.

Patterson Found Guilty of Assault and Battery—
Several Divorces Are Granted.

As we went to press last week circuit court was busy with the case of the People vs. Patterson, charged with assault with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty of assault and battery. He was fined $25 and $75 costs.

In the case of the People vs. Hillegas, cruelty to animals, the jury disagreed.

A verdict of no cause of action was directed by the judge in the case of Charles G. Bush vs. The Wisconsin Chair company.

The following divorces were granted:

Florence Purtyman vs. Everett Purtyman; Blanche Bromley vs. Nelson Bromley; Della Charon vs. Paul Charon; Ethel Bodie vs. Edward Bodie; Darline Johnson vs. George E. Johnson; Madge Brown vs. Melza Brown; Dora Whenton vs. Melville Whenton.

Court took an adjournment until June 2 when several important cases will be tried.

ALFALFA LEAFLET

Has Just Been Published by Western Michigan Development Bureau.

A leaflet upon the subject of alfalfa growing in western Michigan has just been published by the Western Michigan Development bureau and can be had upon request. The leaflet is from the pen of Joseph Gerber, one of the Newaygo county directors of the bureau. Mr. Gerber is planning a three-days alfalfa campaign for Newaygo county. During these days he will travel over the county with alfalfa speakers and see that the questions of these desiring to begin alfalfa growing are intelligently answered. Any farmer interested can secure one of these bulletins by addressing the bureau at Traverse City and requesting a copy.

Home of Bride's Parents.

Was a Brilliant Affair—Large Number of Guests Witnessed the Ceremony.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Gregory in Hayes township, Saturday noon, Miss Eva Gregory was united in marriage to Mr. Pearl Scott.

The house was beautifully decorated with apple blossoms with a background of evergreen was erected in one corner of the room. At the appointed hour, just while the clock was striking twelve, Miss Zoe Burnett took her place at the organ and played "Lohengrin's Wedding March" and from the stairway came the bridal party led by Rev. B. Atchison, followed by little Miss Fern Gregory bearing the ring in a large white lily. Then came the groom and his groomsmen, Mr. Lee Scott followed by the bride and bridesmaid, Miss Irene Gregory.

The ring ceremony was used. William Gregory, brother of the bride, gave her in marriage. The bride wore light blue messaline silk trimmed with cream shadow lace and silk crepe chiffon and carried a large bridal rose in her hand. At the close of the ceremony, and after the many congratulations, a delicious five course dinner was served to about one hundred guests, the tables being decorated with carnations. The bride's table had a center piece of carnations. Many beautiful and costly gifts were received by the bride and groom, who will soon be at home on a farm near their parental homes.

NOT ONLY IN CHARLEVOIX

Similar Cases Occur Daily in This Vicinity.

Not only here in Charlevoix but in our neighboring towns, the same good story is heard. An encouraging instance from Boyne City is given here and will be read by us with great interest.

Frank Belmont, 23 N. Lake street, Boyne City, Michigan, says: "I can certainly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, for I have been greatly relieved by them. I suffered for months from lameness and pain in my back and was hardly able to stoop or lift. I could not rest well at night, owing to too frequent passages of the kidney secretions. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved the lameness and soreness in my back and I can rest much better at night. I feel like a different person."

The above is not an isolated case. Mr. Belmont is only one of many in this vicinity who have gratefully endorsed Doan's. If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Belmont had. 50c all stores. There is more Caturrh in this section of the country than in other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure, with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Caturrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any cure not following the directions for its use. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. Women Workers.

According to the American Medicine, "experience shows that the strain of self support is too great for female nerves, and physique and early break down results. In very few callings do we ever find women of middle age who show anything like the comparative vigor of men of the same decade of life. As far as we know every class of female labor is considered a temporary employment and not a life calling. It is almost invariably exchanged for the more normal family life—if the right man comes along."

THE KITCHEN CUPBOARD

RHUBARB PASTRIES.

PIES and tarts of rhubarb are popular in the spring. The only objection to them is that the under crust is sometimes soggy, a fault due to the fact that the juice soaks through.

Here are recipes for some nice rhubarb pastries:

Shortcake and Tarts.

Rhubarb Shortcake.—Make a dough as for any other kind of shortcake, roll thin and brush the surface with melted butter, then spread rhubarb cut in quarter of an inch pieces over half the surface of the dough, sprinkle thickly with sugar, turn the other half of the crust over this, place the edges together and bake. Serves as you would strawberry shortcake.

Rhubarb Tarts.—Prepare the rhubarb and the crusts separately. Bake crisp crusts in muffin tins. Wash, dry and skin rhubarb stalks, cut them in inch pieces and stew them slowly until perfectly tender with a very little water. Add sugar when they are still hot from the stove, while they are still hot. Chill the rhubarb and at the last minute put it into the crusts.

Served With Custard.

Rhubarb Cobbler.—Take a cupful of sour milk, a half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a little cold water and add to the milk a tablespoonful of butter and enough flour to make a medium batter. Put the rhubarb, cut in short lengths, in a pudding dish and sugar it generously. Then pour over it the batter. Bake in a moderate oven. Serve it hot with boiled custard or sugar and cream.

An Old Fashioned Pie.

Rhubarb Pie.—Wash and cut the rhubarb into small pieces, but do not remove the pink skin. Pour boiling water over it and let it stand for five minutes, then drain it off. This draws out some of the acid juice. Fill an earthen or granite plate with the rhubarb and sprinkle over it sugar in the proportion of one cupful to a heaping pint of rhubarb. Mix one tablespoonful of flour with the sugar and put one table spoonful of butter in little pieces, here and there, on the pieplant. Cover with a rich crust, which should be pressed close to the edge of the plate. Slash in the middle and bake slowly.

Meaning of "Canberra."

Political circles in Melbourne are greatly amused by the statement by Archibald Menzies, a noted Queensland authority on aboriginal names, that Canberra, the name selected for the new commonwealth capital, really means "the laughing jackass." Mr. Menzies blames the government for not having taken the preliminary precaution of having ascertained the meaning of the name before coming to a decision.—London Evening Standard.

A man living at Auburn, New York, had a severe attack of kidney and bladder trouble. Being a working man, not wanting to lose time, he cured himself completely by using Foley Kidney Pills. A Stirring Campaign in Arkansas---Confederates Ordered to March to the Defense of Vicksburg. Wait to Fight a Battle---Opposing Armies Meet Near the Old Battlefield of Pea Ridge---Cavalry Begin Battle at Prairie Grove---Confederates Rush the Attack Upon Divided Federals---Fatal Delay Follows This Bold Initiative---Fierce Struggle Around a Confederate Battery---Other Events of the Week.

By Captain GEO. L. KILMER, Late U. S. V.

WHEN Grant was pushing his column southward against Pemberton in Mississippi early in November, 1862, a hurry summons was sent the Confederate general in command in Arkansas to send troops across the Mississippi river for the defense of Vicksburg.

General T. C. Hindman was in northwestern Arkansas at the time the order reached him to countermand. A Federal army under J. G. Blunt was marching from Springfield, Mo., southward to invade Arkansas, and Hindman made up his mind to fight with Blunt before leaving the field. His force numbered about 11,500 men, that of his opponent probably 2,000 or 3,000 more.

In point of fact, Hindman had planned to invade Missouri from the south and recapture Springfield, which the Federals had occupied since March, 1862. For this purpose he reorganized his command at Van Buren, Ark., a point fifty miles south of Blunt's advanced camp, which was at Fayetteville, not far from the hotly contested field of Pea Ridge.

Marmaduke's Cavalry Repulsed.

Hindman's cavalry corps mustered 2,000 sabers and was commanded by General J. S. Marmaduke, a dashing soldier of the border type. The cavalry led the column and near the close of November halted at Cane Hill, a position within a day's march of Blunt's camp. Blunt's cavalry was distant three days' march, and he attacked Marmaduke on the 28th with infantry alone, driving him back toward Van Buren.

Blunt determined to make a stand at Cane Hill and sent couriers to summon to that point a supporting column of 4,000 infantry and 2,000 cavalry under General Francis Herron, which was marching southward from Springfield.

Blunt was a typical Kansas man of that period. Born in New England, he had settled in Ohio, then emigrated to Kansas. He enlisted in 1861 and rapidly rose to the rank of general. Having learned that Hindman was marching north to fight, Blunt urged Herron to speed his march, but when the battle opened, Dec. 7, the Federal columns were twelve miles apart. Hindman knew the situation in the enemy's lines and determined to fall upon Herron and crush him, then turn against Blunt. But nothing is certain in war.

Battle at Prairie Grove.

The Confederate cavalry under Marmaduke rode out to meet Herron and brushed aside the Federal cavalry, but was soon checked by infantry at Prairie Grove, two miles from Blunt's left flank. Hindman rushed forward his infantry, but, instead of attacking the isolated column at once, formed his line and awaited Herron's attack. Herron was a soldier to fight on sight, and he threw his column against Hindman at noon. The sound of firing reached Blunt, who knew that his ally had been headed off on the march toward his position, and, without a moment's delay, he started his command for Prairie Grove.

The Federal columns combined outnumbered Hindman's force by about 2,000 and were better supplied with artillery. Herron alone had more guns than Hindman.

After fighting vainly for four hours Hindman retreated, having lost 1,700 men. The burst of the fighting fell upon Herron's column, which made the fiercest attacks.

An episode of the little known battle of Prairie Grove worthy to be recalled after fifty years was the combat between Collins' famous battery of flying artillery and one of Herron's batteries led by the Twentieth Wisconsin infantry.

Captain Dick Collins was a proven character in the transmississippi army. His battery had become an institution in the famous brigade of rough riders headed by General Joe Shelby before he gravitated to the leadership. It lost no glory under his command. Like the celebrated artillery chiefs who fought under "Stonewall" Jackson, John Stuart and Forrest, Collins was a man after his leader's own heart. Shelby handled Collins, and Collins handled the guns. At Prairie Grove Shelby's brigade, with Marmaduke's whole command, was massed on a hill to await the charge of Herron's line. Herron had forty-five cannon and Marmaduke but ten. The fight opened with a fierce artillery duel, for Herron wished to give Blunt time to move more troops to the field.

Federal Bayonet Charge.

As the fight progressed Collins changed his pieces from one point to another to impress the enemy with the strength of the Confederate artillery. Finally, four guns of a companion battery were left between the lines with all its horses and caissons shot down just as the Twentieth Wisconsin dashed forward on a bayonet charge. It looked as though the helpless battery was doomed. Shelby stood near and said to Collins, pointing to the Wisconsin men, "When you see their hands upon those wheels, Dick, fire, but not before."

Shelby's dismounted troopers lay in the thicket alongside of Collins' battery, out of view of the enemy, and the daring assaults bounded along, expecting an easy victory over the silent battery and that of Collins as well. At the base of the slope the Wisconsin men stopped for an instant and drank heartily from their canteens, laughing at the easy task ahead of them. Collins waited, as Shelby had directed, until the doomed Federals were within fifty feet of Shelby's crouching troopers—then let fly double loads of canister. Herron's men rallied and with reinforcements again tried to take the guns, but were driven back to their own batteries, leaving the Confederate pieces untouched.

When the Twentieth Wisconsin received the order to charge the heights it advanced at double quick the distance of 100 rods, where it came face to face with the enemy. The regiment halted and fired two rounds, then commenced to climb the hill. The slope was covered with dense underbrush, and it was with great difficulty that the Wisconsin men advanced. Pressing on in as good a line as possible, they encountered the Confederate battery. After stopping to fire one volley the assailants rushed forward among the guns.

Repulsed by Collins' Guns.

The men raised a cheer of exultation while the color bearer, Sergeant Teal, hoisted the flag over one of the guns. Then they pressed on toward the Confederate line, getting within thirty feet of Shelby's ranks. A terrible storm of bullets greeted their advance.

vanced, and under the fire of Collins' guns the whole line at last gave way. A heavy column of Confederate reserve infantry also moved up on the flank, threatening to engulf the brave fighters, and there was no course left but to retreat.

Seeing the Wisconsin men retreat, Hindman's troops advanced and continued to pour a galling fire into the shattered ranks, pursuing them until they had fallen back beyond the dismantled battery. The charge of the Twentieth lasted but twenty minutes, but in that brief time over 200 men, nearly half the number engaged, were shot down. One soldier was hit by eight bullets.

After the stunning defeat of his plans Hindman withdrew his army behind the Arkansas river and attempted ed to reorganize it for another campaign. But a couple of weeks after the battle of Prairie Grove Blunt moved rapidly up with a strong force, and Hindman hastily retreated to Little Rock, leaving all northwestern Arkansas to the Federals. Hindman was declared to be a man of genius for a secretary of war or a department commander, but not capable of commanding an army or executing a plan of battle. His failure to dispose of Blunt renewed the activity of the Federals west of the Mississippi, but Prairie Grove was the last battle of the year in the transmississippi country.

Morgan, the Raider, at Hartsville.

While the army under General W. S. Rosecrans was being refitted at Nashville Morgan's cavalry was raiding the surrounding country. On the 7th Morgan's command captured the Thirty-ninth brigade, under Colonel A. B. Moore, at Hartsville, where he had been posted by General George H. Thomas to guard the ford of the Cumberland river and to watch the enemy on the Lebanon road. The brigade consisted of three infantry regiments, a battalion of cavalry and a section of artillery, making a force of about 2,000 effective men.

The command was badly posted, and the commanding officers of the infantry regiments failed to co-operate or to obey orders. It was in the main a repetition of the disgraceful affair at Murfreesboro, where General N. B. Forrest captured that place during the previous July. Moore was surprised in his camp early in the morning. No warning was given by the pickets, and before any disposition could be made of the troops Morgan's men were upon them. Morgan's command consisted of his cavalry and two regiments of infantry.

Raised the White Flag.

Moore threw out a skirmish line to resist the advance of Morgan's infantry and dismounted cavalry in line. The Confederates pressed steadily forward to a mine at the foot of the hill on which Moore had formed his line and under shelter of this poured such a destructive fire upon the Federal troops that Moore ordered a new line to be formed in the rear. In this movement the whole line was thrown into confusion, and, being attacked on their right and rear by the cavalry, who had up to this time not been engaged, Moore's command was crowded one on the other into a narrow space, where the fire of the enemy proved terribly effective. Moore's troops being unable to return the fire and not being able to make another disposition of them, the white flag was raised, and the entire command surrendered.

Colonel Tafel, in command of the One Hundred and Sixty Ohio, becoming separated from the other troops, made some further resistance; but, being overpowered, he also surrendered. The contest lasted only a little over an hour. Morgan's loss was 150 killed and wounded, his entire command captured, with all army and camp equipment, trains and two pieces of artillery. Morgan's loss was 125 killed and wounded.

Other Events of the Week.

Owing to the destruction of merchant ships sailing under the United States flag by the Confederate cruiser Alabama, foreign shipments in these vessels had fallen off 50 per cent in one month. In home waters, however, the Confederate warships were unable to cope with the Federal fleets, and southerners were demanding a more efficient naval armament.

On Dec. 4 a large military and naval expedition sailed from New York under command of General N. P. Banks, its destination was known only to the war department, yet newspaper guesses pointed to the Gulf coast. A smaller expedition sailed south from Fortress Monroe under sealed orders. Both expeditions landed at New Orleans, and the forces took part in the operations on the lower Mississippi.

Sudden and intense cold, preceded by a heavy fall of snow on the 5th, impeded army movements in Virginia. Soldiers in the opposing camps along the Rappahannock river were frozen to death on outpost lines.

Pemberton's urgent call for reinforcements to hold Vicksburg against Grant was an evidence that he had little confidence in his ability to guard the immediate fortress and also cover the large territory adjacent and lying exposed to the Federal columns. But he did not give up the task of warring of the threatened blow. While Grant was planning and making dispositions the Confederate cavalryman Forrest gathered his rough riders in west Tennessee for a dash upon the Mississippi Central railroad, upon which Grant depended for communications with his main base in Kentucky. Forrest had come from Bragg's camp in east Tennessee. Bragg could spare no infantry to re-enforce Pemberton, but he promptly sent what aid he could in the shape of a raiding enfilade.

Grant's army supplies for the Mississippi campaign had to be drawn from Columbus, Ky., over the Mississippi Central. This long line of communication was guarded by soldiers stationed in forts at Bolivar, Jackson and Humboldt, west Tennessee, and in blockhouses at all the river crossings. At important points east of the line there were also strong garrisons to offer a defense against attacks from east Tennessee, where the Confederates were in force.

A Raid Behind Grant.

At the time Grant was looking hope fully for a speedy victory ahead, south ward, the Confederate General Bragg, at Murfreesboro, devised a plan of harassing the Federal rear in west Tennessee. He chose for the leader of this enterprise General Nathan Bedford Forrest, a cavalry commander who had made his mark in battle, but more especially as a soldier of resource and daring in independent attacks upon isolated posts of the enemy. The Tennessee river rolled between Forrest and his new field of operations, and the line was watched over by the enemy's scouts. Halting at Clifton, Forrest prepared his command for the

It is hoped that this year the good work begun last year in making the shores of Round Lake more pleasing to the eyes of our visitors will be continued. If there has been anything which has been a disgrace to our city, named "The Beautiful," it has been the old unpainted shacks and rubbish heaps that lined the shores of Round Lake. There is no more beautiful sight in the world than to look up Park Avenue or Mason and Clinton Streets from the lake but the first view nearly spoils it all. If all will do a little, such as the Charlevoix Hardware Company has on their lawn, a real transformation could be worked.

DR. KANAGY DEAD

Was One of The Oldest Physicians in Grand Traverse Region.

Dr. L. M. Kanagy, a pioneer physician of this region, was found dead in his rooms in Ellsworth yesterday afternoon. The last seen of the doctor was Sunday night, when he attended a professional case. When found he was still dressed and it is thought death must have occurred Sunday night of heart trouble.

He was one of the oldest physicians in this region, having been in this region for over forty years, during which time he had practiced his profession at Charlevoix, Attwood, Elk Rapids and Ellsworth.

He leaves two sons, Henry of Washington state and Will of Chicago and one daughter, Mrs. J. M. Pride, of this city. The body will be brought here for burial.

READY FOR SUMMER

Improvements Being Made on Beach Hotel—Tea Room Will be Special Feature.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker are busily engaged in putting the Beach Hotel in shape for the summer season, which Mrs. Baker informs us from present indications bids fair to be one of the best in several years.

Besides new furnishings, a new pastry room and a dining room for the help has been added. The tea room will again be made a special attraction this year, particular attention being paid to catering to outside parties for fish suppers, lobster, etc. for which the Beach has gained so enviable a reputation.

Mrs. Baker will be assisted in the office by Mrs. A. L. Coulter and expects to be ready for business by the middle of June.

A Club Kick.

The house committee of a New York club recently received this unique complaint:

"I have the honor to inform you that I lunched at the club this afternoon and had as my guests three gentlemen, all well known gourmets. Among other things an omelet was served. It contained only three flies. As an old member of the club, jealous of its reputation, I naturally found this very embarrassing, as in order to make an equitable division of the omelet it was necessary either to divide a fly—a nice bit of carving, as you must concede—or forego a fly myself. I beg to suggest that in the future, when an omelet is served for four persons, it should either be with (a) four flies or (b) no flies at all."—Everybody's Magazine.

BY SPECIAL MESSENGER

An Errand That Had Unexpected Results.

By WARING MITCHELL.

On that certain Tuesday morning when Colonel Graves got ready to start for the city from his country place he said to his daughter Winnie:

"It is possible that I may want those Mexican bonds this afternoon, and here is the key of the safe. If I have to have them I will send you a note by a special messenger."

The colonel was something of a lawyer, speculator and broker, and Miss Winnie was his sixteen-year-old daughter. She acted as his amanuensis at home and was pretty familiar with his business transactions. The bonds spoken of had a face value of $20,000, but of late had been rather wabbly in the market and had caused the colonel considerable anxiety. At 1 o'clock that afternoon he wanted the bonds and telephoned his daughter to that effect, saying that he would send a messenger. Instead of sending a boy from the regular service, he stepped into the office of Jones next door and said:

"Jones, I want a trisny fellow to run out to my house and bring me back some bonds. Haven't I noticed a young man around here?"

"Yes, He's a nephew of mine. He's out now, but write a line and I'll send him when he returns. He ought to go out to East Park and back in an hour."

The colonel wrote a line to Miss Winnie to deliver the bonds to bearer and then went out on "the street" on business. Fifteen minutes later Jones' nephew was making for the Grand Central station as fast as the express in the subway would carry him.

Jones hadn't given the young man's biography, but it may be stated that his name was Vincent Gray, his age twenty-two, and he was in the office of his uncle to learn the devious ways of Wall street before setting up in business for himself on the comfortable fortune left him by a deceased aunt. For a young man who expected to come in contact with bulls and bears and other animals, young Gray was very trustful of human nature. For instance, while his train was speeding along underneath the streets and he was handling to a strap thinking of things financial a young man with ambitions leaned against him and picked his pocket without exciting the least suspicion.

The light fingered youth found there only a cardcase and the letter to Miss Winnie, but they were sufficient to bring about several unexpected results. He passed into another car and opened and read the letter, and he saw the golden opportunity he had been looking for. In the cardcase were two or three dollar bills. The thief had a right to infer that his victim had no more money about him. He likewise had a right to infer that young Gray could not produce the wherewithal to buy a ticket for East Park. The fare was only 20 cents, but without it a man is as badly off as if the sun were $5.

There was a train ready to leave. The thief bought his ticket and got aboard. Vincent Gray stood at the ticket window and fussed and fumbled and was left. His cardcase and money were gone, and when he found that the letter had also been taken he realized that he was in trouble. He hadn't even a nickel to get back to the office. He hadn't the wherewithal to telephone to his uncle Jones in New street, and after wasting fifteen minutes trying to figure out the problem he made haste to a pawnshop, where he put down his watch for $5.

The next train to East Park was ten minutes late in starting and the same in reaching the Park, so there were in all fifty minutes lost. The young man had not suspected that he was the victim of a pickpocket, but supposed he had lost his property in the jam while boarding the car. He had been told that a telephone message would precede him, and he had remembered the address. Therefore he did not worry so much over the loss of the letter. It was only when he came face to face with Winnie Graves and stated his errand and saw her look of surprise and distrust that he realized the situation.

"Why, sir," she replied, "those bonds were delivered to a messenger more than half an hour ago."

"But I was sent for them and was delayed."

"If you were sent for them, you must have a line from my father."

"I—I had a line, but unfortunately I lost it, together with my money. My name is Vincent Gray, and I am in the office of Ezra Jones, in the same building with your father. I am afraid that some rascal found the lost letter and has taken advantage of it."

"And I am afraid that another rascal is trying to do the same thing," exclaimed Miss Winnie's Aunt Ruth, who was at the head of the house and who had entered the library just in time to hear the young man's words. "But, my dear, you surely can't think that."

"He wouldn't have sent Tom, Dick or Harry on such an important errand. Young man, sit down here until we find out the truth of this matter."

The girl went to the telephone, and the young man sat down with visions of policemen and prison bars passing before his eyes. The aunt took a seat directly in front of him and stared at him in a cold, cruel way—a way that gave him to understand that she would let no gully inn escape. After three or four minutes Winnie returned to the room to say:

"That's always the way. Central tells me that the line into the city is crossed or something and it may be an hour or more before they find out the trouble and remedy it."

"Then I will go back and tell your father the situation," said Mr. Gray. "Some sharper has the bonds, and the police should be notified at once."

"You will sit right here until that telephone wire is in working order," announced Aunt Ruth. "There are men about the place, and we have dogs and guns, and if you try to run away it will be the worse for you. Winnie, notify the coachman that we have a suspicious character in the house."

"She needn't do anything of the sort. I will sit here until you have solved the mystery. I am to blame for losing the letter, but if the bonds are not recovered it will not be my fault."

"He doesn't look like a suspicious person," whispered Winnie to her aunt, but in tones loud enough so that he caught the words and turned red again.

"He may not to you, who can't tell a robber from a church deacon. But he does to me, and here he shall stay until we know all about it. You sit down in the hall and wait for the telephone. And I'll keep him under my eyes."

Aunt Ruth leaned back in her chair, folded her arms, compressed her lips and fastened her eyes on Mr. Gray, and had been a hawk man of ten years' standing he must have been disconcerted. As it was, he coughed and blushed and hitched around and crossed and recrossed his legs. When the aunt broke the silence it was to impart no cheerful information. What she said was:

"It makes you squirm to realize that you've reached the end of your rope at last, but you'll squirm more still when the judge pronounces sentence. Why I pity your poor mother, I hope you'll get at least ten years."

Mr. Gray made no reply. He couldn't find words. About every ten minutes for the next hour he received a brief, vigorous lecture until he was almost worked up to the point where he thought of jumping through a window and taking his chances, when a man's step was heard. There was an "Oh, papa!" from Miss Winnie in the hall, and Colonel Graves stalked in to exclaim:

"What in the devil is the matter here?"

"There he sits," replied Aunt Ruth as she pointed to the culprit.

It took about ten minutes to unravel things—that is, to establish Vincent Gray's identity. Fortunately by this time the telephone was working, and fortunately Mr. Jones was in his office. It took five minutes more to discover that Winnie had given the false messenger Honduras instead of Mexican bonds and that the colonel was simply relieved of some waste paper.

When it came to apologies and begging Mr. Gray to forgive and forget and stay to dinner, perhaps a full quarter of an hour was consumed, but it is not on record that Mr. Gray regarded the time as thrown away.

Now when the colonel smiles and throws out hints at his prospective son-in-law Miss Winnie blushes and protests. Aunt Ruth assumes one of her sweetest looks and says:

"I don't say I shall leave when he becomes one of the family, but I do say that I shall always lock up my jewelry when I go to bed and lock and bolt the door."

On London Surface Lines.
 London tramway men seem to be developing the smart answer habit, says the Manchester Guardian. For example, a correspondent overheard this the other day:

On the front of the tram the indicator showed "Piccadilly," but the route outlined on the side of the car showed that it was the usual Albert square service.

"Are you going to Albert square?" a lady asked.

"No, missus; Piccadilly," was the reply.

"Oh, but the side indicator says Albert square."

"Perhaps so, missus, but we don't go sideways."

Another correspondent reports a similar case: Passenger (to conductor)—Do you stop outside Alcock & Milne's? Conductor—Yes, miss; they won't let us go inside.

Are You Stout?

There is no valid excuse for a poor figure, even though a woman be fleshy. ADJUSTO CORSETS have made it unnecessary for those who have grown stout to deplore the fact.

ADJUSTO CORSETS

are designed to comfortably and surely conceal superfluous flesh, training it into handsome curves by means of the wonderful "reducing bands." The abdomen and hips are supported and reduced by these easily adjusted bands, and an attractive, rounded, graceful figure is the ultimate result. Let us show you the ADJUSTO.

Comparative Digestibility of Food

Made with different Baking Powders

From a Series of Elaborate Chemical Tests:

An equal quantity of bread (biscuit) was made with each of three different kinds of baking powder—cream of tartar, phosphate, and alum—and submitted separately to the action of the digestive fluid, each for the same length of time.

The relative percentage of the food digested is shown as follows:

Bread made with
Royal Cream of Tartar Powder:

100 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with phosphate powder:

68 1/4 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with alum powder:

67 3/4 Per Cent. Digested

These tests, which are absolutely reliable and unprejudiced, make plain a fact of great importance to everyone: Food raised with Royal, a cream of tartar Baking Powder, is shown to be entirely digestible, while the alum and phosphate powders are found to largely retard the digestion of the food made from them.

Undigested food is not only wasted food, but it is the source of very many bodily ailments.

Grange Column

Ironton Grange.

Ironton Grange met in regular session Tuesday evening, May 20, with an attendance of twenty-two members and was called to order by the worthy master.

One application for membership was received. Lecturer's hour was taken up with readings and discussions.

Under good of the order, the committee reported that two bids had been received for building the kitchen. The matter was talked over and left to the committee.

After other subjects for the good of the order were discussed, grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

Wilson Grange No. 719.

During the business session of Wilson grange Saturday May 24, several bills were presented. The dance committee reported $9.40 cleared from the last dance. The members voted to have the business agent order 124 pounds of paris green, also to reduce the grange rates to $1.10 and $1.60 for two meetings for the purpose of gaining new members. The treasurer, who was elected to fill vacancy refused to act, and Brother George Jaquays were elected and installed to fill vacancy.

The literary program consisted of several selections of readings, recitations and songs, also discussions on two questions: What are the agricultural possibilities of Wilson Township? What is the short ballot and what is the benefit derived from it? The next regular meeting will be held in three weeks.

PIONEER OF THE COUNTY

W. B. Wilder Died at His Home in Evangeline Township Last Week.

Was Veteran of Civil War—Had Lived in County For Twenty Years—Age 74 Years.

W. B. Wilder, aged 74 years, a pioneer of Charlevoix county, died at his home on his farm in Evangeline township, two miles north of Boyne City at 10 minutes after 10 o'clock Wednesday night. He had been in poor health for two or three years and was worse the last two or three weeks, although able to be up a portion of the time.

Mr. Wilder was a resident of North Boyne, or Bay Springs as it was formerly called, for nearly 20 years. He was a mason by occupation. Twelve years ago he moved on a farm in Evangeline township. He was a veteran of the Civil war, serving as a private in Co. G, Sixth regiment, Michigan Infantry volunteers.

Decedent is survived by his widow, one son, Edwin Wilder, at home, and three daughters: Mrs. Charles Soley and Mrs. William Longhin, both of North Boyne, Mrs. Howard L. Wandell, who resided with her husband at the home of Mr. Wilder.

The funeral services were held at the home at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon. The services were conducted by Wallace Bailey, an old friend of the deceased, with interment at Maple Lawn cemetery.

W. C. T. U. ANNUAL CONVENTION

Was Held at Boyne City Tuesday and Wednesday of Last Week.

THE ATTENDANCE WAS LARGE

Mrs. Gertrude Burdick of Charlevoix Re-elected County President.

All Unions in County Represented Except Norwood—Every Session Was Full of Interest—List of New Officers.

The twenty-second annual convention of the Charlevoix County W. C. T. U. was held in Boyne City last week with delegates present from all the unions in the county with the exception of Norwood.

Tuesday's session was mainly taken up with business, seating of the convention, appointments of committees and the annual reports from the unions of the county. A memorial service for deceased members was conducted by Mrs. H. P. Parmelee of this city. Mrs. Anna Fox of East Jordan gave a paper, "Why I am in Favor of Woman Suffrage." After the announcements, the convention adjourned to the dining room for supper.

Greetings for the city were extended by Dr. W. H. Marshall. His talk was based upon the national motto "For God and Home and Native Land." He said the work must be for all three, for one who is not a patriot is in heart, at least, a traitor, that woman had surprised the world by her moral courage; the methods of work along temperance lines must be educational, not force, and must be persistent.

Rev. Gleason, in his greeting for churches said in part, "It is altogether fitting that you should be welcomed by the churches, for your work is like our work. Your society bears the title, Christian. We must gird on the armor for the fight which will undoubtedly be made by the liquor forces to place Charlevoix county in the wet columns, as they have Emmet and Osego."

A song "The Lost Chord," by Mrs. Thompson was followed by greetings for the schools by Superintendent L. A. Butler. Michigan was the first state to make the teaching of physiology, and the harmful effects of alcohol and tobacco, mandatory in the public schools, a movement which has been followed by all other states. Credit for this belongs to the W. C. T. U. In Mr. Butler's opinion the greatest present need is the appointment of a strong national committee to test methods and arrange material for teaching temperance in schools.

Greetings for the missionary societies was given by Mrs. W. H. White, and the W. C. T. U. by Mrs. John Sudman.

Response to the greetings was made by Mrs. H. P. Parmelee of Charlevoix, who gave a brief resume of the work of the order since its organization forty years ago. As the beginning was made with "no creed, no caste and no cash," the results accomplished are little less than marvelous. Mrs. Parmelee believes that temperance work is women's work, for the men are too busy, and to do this work, women must have the ballot.

Remarks by Rev. Duffey, and by the president, Mrs. Burdick, a thank offering, song and benediction closed this service.

The program Thursday morning included a paper "The Power of Influence" by Mrs. James Howey; parliamentary drill, conducted by Mrs. M. E. Heston, various reports and election of the following:

President—Mrs. Gertrude Burdick, Charlevoix.

Vice-president-at-large—A. de 11 Cameron, Norwood.

TRIP TAKEN OVER ROUTE

West Michigan Pike Boomers Passed Through This City Friday.

ORGANIZATION IS COMPLETED

Guide Will be Published For Information of Automobilists and Tourists.

New Highway Will be Built Under Provisions of the New Good Roads Act Passed at Last Session of Legislature.

The members of the path finding tour for the opening of the West Michigan Pike, or the road from Chicago to Mackinaw were in Charlevoix Friday. In the party were Dr. DeKleene, Grand Haven; R. M.
Hoffman, Manistee; J. M. Bradford,
Arcadia; John I. Gibson, Frank
Hamilton and George G. Bates, Traverse City.

The name of the organization has been changed to West Michigan Pike association, with the slogan,
"Chicago to Mackinaw, Lake Shore
All the Way."

The following are the officers:
President—Dr. William DeKleene, Grand Haven.

Secretary and Treasurer—Richard
M. Hoffman, Manistee.
Executive Committee—Frank Hamilton, Lewis P. Couger, Richard M. Hoffman, William DeKleene, John I. Gibson, J. E. Merritt, I. R.
Allen.

A publicity committee has been appointed, with John I. Gibson as chairman, to publish a guide for automobilists and tourists, covering the West Michigan section.

A recent act of the legislature provided for this great highway through western Michigan; Manistee and Traverse City, being on the direct route. Later on, an amendment was passed, through the efforts of Hon. John R. Santo, providing for a branch from Manistee, north across Manistee, Benzie and Leelanau counties to Northport thence to Traverse City.

The roads built under the provision of the good roads act of Michigan, the width of twelve feet, are entitled to $650 award per mile.
Where the roads would constitute a part of the trunk line of the Chicago to Mackinaw highway, they will be entitled to double award, $1300 per mile. The provisions of the trunk highway bill, provided for mileage in proportion to the number of townships in the county and where the trunk line does not consume the entire mileage, other roads may be built, and award taken advantage of. This can be done where the geographical arrangement of the county make it possible or necessary to do so, to give the whole county full benefit.

The object of the pathfinding trip, conducted by the West Michigan Pike association is to determine the feasibility of proposed roads and is preliminary to a greater and more extended trip, which starts July 7.

Interest will be added to this event, as the hydroplane fleet, that is planning a trip from Chicago to Mackinaw will accompany and parallel the automobiles at this time.
All along the road of this recent trip the path-finding party has met with the greatest enthusiasm by the local good roads officials and automobile enthusiasts.

This is a campaign of education, demonstrating to the regions through which the proposed road will pass, the great advantages to be derived, and to secure a hearty co-operation in the building of good roads; ultimately taking advantage of the increased award offered for the building of the trunk highways that may later on be selected.

CONVERSE SPOKE ON DIVORCE

At the Meeting of the Men's Bible Class Held Last Sunday Evening.

Next Sunday Judge S. A. Correll Will Give Report of Ann Arbor Meeting.

Last Sunday Mr. J. E. Converse of Boyne City addressed the Men's Bible class on the subject of divorce. The invitation given to the ladies to attend was generously responded to and an audience of about 75 people were present. Mr.
Converse took up the matter of divorce proceedings in court and explained them thoroughly and then reviewed the whole subject covering practically all phases of the question. His hearers were fortunate in being able to have presented to them in so compact a form this vexed problem. Mr. Converse took the position that more rigid divorce laws would not lessen the evil but that to lessen it, we must begin at the source of the evil and make more stringent laws with reference to marriage. This was Mr. Converse's first appearance before the class and it is the unanimous consensus that we shall want him again as soon as he is available.

Next week Judge S. A. Correll will give the class an account of his experiences at the recent convention at Ann Arbor on the subject of corrections and charities.

Out of the multitude of social-logical subjects that were discussed Judge Correll will select that which he considers most interesting to our local needs. The class sent Judge Correll as a delegate to this convention and are therefore interested in what took place there.

AIO IMPROVEMENT

Department of Public Instruction Issues Several Helpful Bulletins.

Desires of developing a statewide movement along the line of improving and beautifying school grounds, Superintendent of Public Instruction Luther L. Wright has just issued a bulletin giving excellent plans for school grounds and directions for planting trees and shrubs. The bulletin was prepared by Professor C. P. Halligan of the Michigan Agricultural College and contains designs for rural, village and city school grounds together with lists of trees and shrubs desirable and undesirable, which can be grown easily in Michigan.

In harmony with encouragement of school improvement, the department of public instruction has also just issued a book of plans for four, six and eight room school buildings, suitable for village and ward schools. These represent the most modern ideas as to proper heating, lighting, ventilating and arrangement, and it is expected, will aid in giving the state more practical, attractive and sanitary school buildings. The bulletins containing the school ground designs and the school building plans will be sent free upon request.

Flag Day Proclamation.

We believe that the American flag is the most beautiful and the most significant of all the flags of all the nations of the earth. June 14, 1913, is the 136th birthday of our flag. The story of the stars and stripes is the story of a great and mighty people. It symbolizes "life, liberty, and the pursuit of human happiness," the fundamental elements of a great brotherhood. Let the people of Michigan on Saturday, June 14th, display this sacred emblem on all state, municipal and school buildings; let American citizens conduct such exercises as will encourage our youth to love and reverence the flag and what it symbolizes.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of Michigan, do issue this proclamation and enthusiastically urge the observance of Saturday, the fourteenth of June, 1913, as Flag Day.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, this twenty-first day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen and of the Commonwealth the Seventy-seventh.

NOW IS TIME TO GET BUSY

Orchardists are Warned of the Damage Caused by Caterpillars.

Work of Destroying Them Should be Done Early in the Morning or Evening.

Fruit growers of Grand Traverse and other parts of western Michigan are facing no small problem in fighting the advances of caterpil-lars which are making an unusual show of distasteful strength this season. While the number of nests in evidence are not as great as they have been in some years, there are enough of the pests to warrant early and concentrated action on the part of the farmers of this section. Reports having been made of much destructive work did by these pests in nearby cities.

The caterpillars are now in their nests feeding on adjacent foliage preparatory to migration. After migration, eggs are laid for next year's crop of insects. It is in the migratory stage that they do their harm, for in passing through a young orchard it is not unusual for caterpillars to strip the small trees of buds and leaves.

Many orchardists have already destroyed the nests that have been built in their orchards, but the greatest danger lies in the worms coming to maturity in wooded tracts, where they are less likely to be destroyed before attaining that stage where they can and will damage fruit trees.

"A few hours spent by each man interested will prevent what may be serious damage later in the season," said a leading fruit grower.
"Burning with a torch is one method. Cutting out the nests and crushing the inhabitants is another.
Either is effective. It is a very simple, but the important thing is to get busy now before the worms start traveling through fruit lands.
Of course, this possibility of damage can be forestalled in some cases by spraying with any one of several poisons, but even then growers are inviting risk. The thing to do is to kill the caterpillars before they commence to move. Work in the evening or early morning is the most effective, for the worms are then in their nests."

MEMORIAL DAY

Was Properly Observed in Charlevoix Under Direction of the W. R. C.

Memorial day was appropriately observed in Charlevoix, the exercises being in charge of the Woman's Relief corps. For almost the first time in the entire month, the weather was kind and gave us pleasant skies during the morning and probably as large a crowd was present to pay tribute to our departed soldiers as there has ever been recent years.

The program at the Charlevoix theater was carried out as published, the work by the schools especially being a pleasing feature. After the exercises the members of the corps, old soldiers, representatives of the schools and citizens, headed by the band, went to the cemetery where the graves were decorated and the ritualistic ceremonies of the corps were carried out.

HEALTH TRAIN TO TOUR STATE

Educate Public on Pure Food, Sanitation and Health Preservation.

Will be on the Road Three Weeks and Visit Five Hundred Cities and Towns.

Leaving Lansing August 1, a special train containing exhibits of the state dairy and food commission, as well as the state board of health, will tour Michigan towns and cities. Dr. Robert L. Dixon, secretary of the state board of health, will have charge of the exhibits of the health department while Fern L. Shannon, state analyst for the dairy and food commission will take charge of the exhibits of his department. Food Commissioner Helme is expected to accompany the tour, and give talks on dairy sanitation and general conduct. The purpose of the trip is to educate the general public on the matter of pure food, sanitation and preservation of health.

From Lansing the train will travel southward making Kalamazoo, then to Bay City, Grand Rapids and other important points.
Next Muskegon, Petoskey, Mackinac City, Saginaw and then back to Detroit. The latter city will be reached about August 20. In all about 500 cities and towns will be visited. In the larger cities from one to two days will be occupied in exhibiting the contents of the cars and discussing the situation with citizens.

There will be interesting exhibits from both departments. In the health departments there will be illustrations of the ravages of tuberculosis, typhoid and general enemies to the public health. In addition, specimens of the drinking water of the state will be exhibited showing the contamination of the supply of many cities.

Adulteration of foods will be the principal subject discussed in the food department exhibits and the representatives of the food commission will take hot shots at the milk and cream supplies of many cities.

Milk crusades throughout the state which have resulted in the cleaning of many milk supplies throughout the state, including Lansing, will also take up much of the time of the food commission and will go so far as to present in a comprehensive manner the condition of tuberculosis cattle from which many diseases are distributed through the milk supply.

Selected For Merit.

A National association formed to elevate the standard of the work of commercial schools and colleges throughout the United States has selected the Detroit Business University as its first choice for membership from the state of Michigan on account of its unblemished record for 60 years and its present high state of efficiency in equipment and work. It stands A 1 and fully "Accredited" as a reliable school by this association, and is well worthy of this recognition. A

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS

PROLOGUE.

Ladies and gentlemen, permit us to present Colonel Todhunter of Missouri and his home folks. They're our kind of people—just the plain, homelike, everyday sort, you know, with whom you can summer and winter and whom you can get to know and to like and to feel for when they run into trouble. There's plenty of love and romance in this story, with politics of the sort that will never go out of date—or let's hope so, anyway. There's nothing of the problem story in this tale of the colonel and his friends and foes; just a plain, straight, all the way through story of the honest, old fashioned kind that's worth reading.

CHAPTER I.

Colonel Todhunter Campaigns Among the Confederate Daughters.

COLONEL THURSTON T. TODHUNTER was undoubtedly the distinct embodiment of that picturesque native American type, the Kentuckian born and Missouri bred, as he entered old Judge Bolling's law office in Nineveh and saluted its white haired occupant with a cordially impressive wave of the hand in friendly greeting.

It was the morning of the day preceding the return from St. Louis of the Hon. William J. Strickland, law partner of Judge Bolling and now an avowed candidate for the Democratic primary nomination for governor of Missouri, and Colonel Todhunter's invariably aggressive bearing was due to his delight that his lifelong friend had at last yielded to popular pressure and made open announcement of his candidacy. The scent of political battle in the Strickland cause was hot in the colonel's nostrils, and he sniffed its savor with unalloyed joy.

Tall and erect, Colonel Todhunter carried his spare but stalwart frame with an ease that somewhat belied the grizzled gray of his hair and the white of his soldierly mustache and old fashioned "imperial." One could not easily have failed to recognize him for just what he was—a lineal descendant of that colonial Virginian stock whose grandsons followed the pioneer trail that led from the Old Dominion, first to North Carolina, then to Kentucky and Tennessee and thence to Missouri, a stock that has remained distinctively American since the time of its first taking root in American soil.

Colonel Todhunter laid his cane on Judge Bolling's office table as he entered and executed his gesture of courteous salutation.

"You can't fool me!"

"Well, Judge," he said jubilantly, "the fight's begun, and we've got to rally around old Bill Strickland to a fare you well, huh! I-gad, huh, I ain't a-goin' to be content with nothin' less'n whippin' that there Stephen K. Yancey, outfit to a frazzle, huh!"

Old Judge Bolling smiled at the colonel's restful halting of the imminent combat. "You're right, Colonel Todhunter," he agreed. "And the sooner we get plump into the middle of the fight the better, sir. It can't begin too soon to please me."

Colonel Todhunter nodded. Then his gray-blue eyes twinkled significantly. "Judge," he said, "the Nineveh Daughters of the Confederacy are givin' a picnic down at Indian Springs today, and they're goin' to set a dinner at a dollar a head for the benefit of the Confederate Soldiers' home at Higginsville, huh. I reckon all that ain't no particular news to you, but I thought maybe you'd enjoy goin' down there with me, huh. I'd be tickled to death to have you."

Judge Bolling's lips twitched. "You old devil, you! You couldn't any more keep from campaigning among the daughters than a yearling colt can keep from kicking up its heels in the pasture and you know it. You can't fool me."

"What I can't do and what a yearling colt can't do are two mighty different things, Judge," answered Colonel Todhunter. "But I ain't connected with old Bill Strickland's campaign in no official capacity that I'm aware of, and it is fit to turn a trick on my own hook, that's nobody's blame business but mine, huh."

Then the colonel chuckled. "I'll tell you one thing and that ain't two: I'd rather have a woman's promise to make her husband vote for me or my candidate than to have a man's own word on a stack o' Bibles a mile high, huh. It's only up to the man to keep his word. But it's up to the woman to prove that she can manage her husband. And she'll do that, huh or die in the attempt."

Old Judge Bolling laughed. "Well, Thurs," he said, "I've just been fooling myself anyway. Mrs. Todhunter herself stopped at our house this morning and took Mrs. Bolling along with her, and she made me promise to come later, so it's all right. They'll have no excuse for saying that we're there in Colonel Strickland's interest, so you and I can go down to Indian Springs with a perfectly easy conscience."

An hour later old Judge Bolling and Colonel Todhunter emerged upon the picnic grounds in company, having driven down in the colonel's buggy.

Mrs. Todhunter, a white haired old aristocrat of the antebellum type, advanced to meet her husband and his friend. If Mrs. Todhunter had a fault it was that she tacitly regarded all Niniveh as being vassal to her social suzerainty and bore herself something as might the ruling monarch of some little principality. But this manner was not apparent in her bearing toward old Judge Bolling, whom she knew as being of her own caste.

"I'm very glad you've come, Judge," she said laughingly. "And especially right now. It may take you and Colonel Todhunter both to make our Mary and young Tom Strickland behave themselves, sir. Tom has already kidnapped Mary away somewhere after I put them to work spreading tablecloths, and I've been vowing all sorts of vengeance on both of them—I don't approve of Tom's behavior at all, Judge."

"It pains me to disagree with a lady, madam," replied the white haired old Judge gallantly, "but I must say I approve of Tom's conduct in getting Miss Mary Todhunter off to himself at every chance, ma'am!"

"That's all very fine, Judge," said Mrs. Todhunter, laughing and shaking her head. "But Mary has no business permitting Tom Strickland to monopolize her. She came out here with Stamford Tucker. I wouldn't blame Stann for the least if he got ugly about it."

Then Mrs. Todhunter laughed and pointed an accusing finger. "There they are now, looking as if butter wouldn't melt in their mouths. Won't you go over there for me, Judge, and tell Tom Strickland to behave himself and send Mary to me right away? There's no earthly use in Colonel Todhunter going, because neither one of them would mind a word he says!" Old Judge Bolling, laughing, moved off toward the young couple.

Mrs. Todhunter turned to the colonel. "You see, I know you like a book, Colonel Todhunter," she said, her eyes twinkling. "You think everything young Tom Strickland does is just right, and you'd stand up for him quicker than his own father. And as for Mary, she can twist you around her finger any time. Don't think I place any dependence upon you, where they are concerned, sir!"

Colonel Todhunter smiled calmly. "I ain't askin' you to, Mary," he retorted. "In the first place, I approve of Tom's fallin' as deep in love with Mary as he knows how. In the second place, interferin' in these here sentimental affairs is a mighty ticklish business, and I'm here at this picnic to have a good time. I'm a-goin' to have it, too!" Saying which, he beat a hasty retreat. But he had hardly succeeded in placing a section of the picnic crowd between himself and Mrs. Todhunter when a young girl came running along his trail, breathless, and with mischievous eyes.

"Mrs. Todhunter wants you to come right back to her, colonel," she announced. "She's short on men to help her, and she's awful hussy. Wants you to come right away, sir."

Colonel Todhunter glanced whimsically at the messenger. "Ain't that just like a man's wife? She didn't want Judge Bolling when she saw him, Oh, no! It's me she wants. And I'll bet she's got the hardest job on the grounds picked out for me right now."

Then he turned to the amused girl.

"Thank you, Miss Louise," he said ruefully. "Please tell Mrs. Todhunter I'll be there in two or three minutes."

Suddenly, but a little distance ahead, he saw Tom Strickland parting from Mary. They were a handsome couple, the colonel's daughter an exquisite type of the well born southern girl, her hair and eyes a rarely pure brown, her skin of almost baby fairness, a proud little mouth, a joyous bearing; the youth a tall and well built young country bred gentleman, his eyes a clear blue, his hair a sunburned yellow, his mouth and chin clean cut and firm. Colonel Todhunter approved heartily of both.

As Mary left her companion and went to join her mother, a second girl, with obvious intent, crossed Tom Strickland's path. She was of a different type, a plebeian beauty, black haired, with passionate eyes, full red lips, a suggestion of rich animal life in her movements.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Tom Strickland!" she said in a low tone, a little break in her voice. "You let me drop like I was something you despised just the minute you caught sight of Mary Todhunter. I wouldn't treat a dog that way, Tom."

There was something pitiful in the utter frankness of surrender with which the speaker's eyes confessed her liking for Tom Strickland. Colonel Todhunter knew her well. She was the granddaughter of old Rafe Doggett, who had been a private soldier in a Confederate regiment during the civil war. The family belonged to the class once known as "poor whites," but old Doggett had been a good soldier, and Lottie-May, his granddaughter, owed her membership in the Daughters of the Confederacy to the esteem in which he was held.

This was even more than a concession to inferior caste. The darkly beautiful country girl whom old Rafe Doggett's son had married in another state had gone away from home one day, leaving her baby daughter behind, and never returned. A picturesque handsome "Indian heri doctor," who had been peddling his wares in "Nineveh" for some days and was known to have paid bold attentions to her, disappeared at the same time. Lottie-May Doggett, inheriting the same vitality of soft roundness, red lips and lustrous black eyes, had grown up in "Nineveh," defiant, under the shadow of her mother's shame.

Tom Strickland stared at the girl, plainly surprised. "Why, Lottie-May," he exclaimed; "I won't let you think such a thing! I only hurried to say 'Howdy' to Miss Mary because she had just got here. Anyway—and here he smiled teasingly—"I could see with one eye that Stann Tucker was just wild to have a talk with you."

Lottie-May's eyes flashed. "Stann Tucker—shucks!" she cried scornfully. "I wouldn't wipe my feet on him, Tom, when you're around, and you know it. But I can tell you one thing"—and here a note of proud vanity sounded in her voice—"tryin' hard as he is to get Miss Mary Todhunter to marry him, just like you are, Stann Tucker loves me more in one minute than he will love her in his whole lifetime."

"Lottie-May," ejaculated Tom angrily, "you mustn't talk like that! You ought to be ashamed. You've got no right to couple Miss Mary Todhunter's name—"

"No, no, that's it!" interrupted the girl hotly. "I mustn't mention Mary Todhunter's name in the same breath with mine. It ain't right, you think! Well, I will—and I hate her! I hate her!"

"I didn't mean that Lottie-May," protested Tom. "You know I didn't mean that."

But the girl was gone. Flaming like a comet, she moved with a sort of outcast pride, her pretty head held high, her eyes flashing. In a moment she had disappeared in the crowd.

"Tom," said Colonel Todhunter, advancing, "you'd better be hurryin' to where Mrs. Todhunter is and make your peace for stealin' Mary away. You're in hot water, young man."

Tom Strickland blushed consciously. "Colonel, I reckon you was saying to me?"

"I couldn't very well help it, Tom."

"Well, sir, you mustn't draw any wrong conclusions from what she said, Colonel Todhunter. Lottie-May's a good girl, so far as I know, and I've always felt sorry for her. But she's been brought up under a cloud, and it's made her sort of reckless and full of the devil. I don't believe she cares how black she paints herself, and I think too much of her to take her at her word about knowin' that Stann Tucker loves her and makes love to her without thinkin' of marryin' her. That's just her wild talk, sir."

"She's certainly grown up to be a mighty pretty girl, Tom," said Colonel Todhunter. "And now that you've broached the subject and I've heard what I have, will you let me give you a word of advice?"

"Certainly, colonel," replied Tom.

"Well, Tom, speakin' plainly, it's this: You better fight mighty shy of Lottie-

SUCCESS

— Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.

— In business most men fail even to get a start, because they lack money.

— The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.

may hereafter, huh. I don't mean anything against the girl. But she thinks a lot of you, and she don't mind lettin' you know it, and that makes a mighty dangerous situation."

Then, seeing that the young man was ill at ease and maybe inwardly resentful, Colonel Todhunter left him, to his obvious relief.

But the colonel himself shook his head doubtfully. "There ain't no bigger fool on earth, huh," he commended with himself, "than a healthy young chap in his twenties, with a head fuller of women than a squash is of seeds—and just about as soft as that there aquash, too, huh. I don't like to think of Tom Strickland, with Mary on one side of him, and him lovin' the very ground she walks on, and Lottie-May Doggett on the other side of him and her lovin' him the way she does love him!"

"Great name above, cap'n!" vociferated the colonel, mock apprehensive in his tone. "What in thunderation is the matter, huh? You look like you'd lost your last friend on earth!"

"Colonel Todhunter," said Slim solemnly, "you're the very man I wanted to see, huh. I'm in a peck of trouble, and I'm a-goin' to ask you to tell me the best way out of it. If you'll be so kind, huh—you havin' more experience in the world than me."

DEATH OF A PIONEER

Mrs. Jane Kenyon has Resided in Charlevoix County Thirty-Six Years.

Died at Home of Her Daughter in Mancelona the First of Last Week.

On Thursday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Mary Torrey of Mancelona, occurred the death of Mrs. Jane Kenyon, familiarly known to her many friends as Grandma Kenyon.

The funeral services were held from the Clarion M. E. church on Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. Kenyon, nee Hicks, was born at Sherburn, England, August 25, 1819 and lived for some time in the household of the Duchess of Southland and later in that of Thomas Purnell, mayor of Scarborough. Miss Hicks left London for Grand Rapids fifty years ago and but for the fact that she was unable to secure reservations on the steamship Arctic, she would have gone down with that ill-fated ship off the New Foundland coast.

She was married at Grand Rapids to Ralph E. Kenyon, and later moved to Leelanau County where her husband and one daughter were buried.

Thirty-six years ago Mrs. Kenyon moved to Charlevoix County and for the past fifteen years has lived at Clarion where she made a host of friends by the sweetness and patience with which she met the trials that came to her.

SOME TIMELY SOUPS.

EXCELLENT soups are possible with spring vegetables of all kinds coming into the markets. Onions, beets, watercress, celery, new potatoes, asparagus, spring peas, etc., all make acceptable soups.

With Spring Onions.

Cream of Onion Soup.—Take half a dozen new onions, chop and cook in two tablespoonsful of butter for eight minutes, add three cupsful of cold water, cook thirty minutes and run through a sieve. Melt the heaping tablespoonful of butter, add four tablespoonfuls of flour, two cupsful of scalded milk, seasoning of salt and red pepper. Cook five minutes. Combine mixtures, add yolks of two eggs slightly beaten and two tablespoonfuls grated cheese.

New Potato Soup.—Pare and slice six large potatoes and three small turnips. Put them in five pints of water, boil five or six hours until perfectly dissolved and of the consistency of pea soup. If the water boils away too fast add a little boiling liquid. When thick enough add butter, pepper and salt. A small piece of salt pork or lamb or veal and a small onion may be added to vary the soup if desired.

Enriched With Eggs.

Roast Soup.—Take one quart of milk, two small white onions, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two of flour, two of grated cheese and salt and pepper to taste. Put the milk on to heat. Fry the onions in the butter, but do not brown; then stir in the flour and cook two minutes longer. Add the milk and cook ten minutes, stirring until it thickens and is smooth. Stir in the seasoning and cheese, and when ready to take up add the eggs, beaten with a few spoonfuls of the soup. Do not let the soup boil after the cheese and eggs are added.

Soup With Dumplings.

Dutch Bean Soup.—Take one cupful of dried beans, soak in lukewarm water overnight, put them over the fire the next morning in one and a half quarts of cold water, one and a quarter pounds of lean salt pork cut in small pieces. Boil slowly for four to five hours or until the beans are very soft. Add to this one cupful of cold milk. Thicken with egg dumplings made with one egg well beaten, four tablespoonfuls of flour, a little salt and enough milk to make a thick batter. Drop into the soup in very small spoonfuls and serve as soon as done.

IN GOOD CONDITION

Annual Meeting of First Baptist Church Held Monday Night.

The annual meeting of the First Baptist Church was held Monday night. Reports showed that the affairs of the church were in good condition, compared with previous years. Over $1200 has been raised during the past year for various funds. During Mr. Atchinson's pastorate, about a year and a half, over thirty new members have been received.

The following officers were chosen, the most of them being reelected: Trustees—Mose Bowdish, William Poole.

Deacons—Joe Edwards, E. F. Martindale, H. W. Kirby.
Clerk—E. F. Martindale.
Treasurer—Charles Carey.
Superintendent Sunday School—Frank Bearas.
Assistant Superintendent—Bert Alcox.

Circuit Court in Session.

Circuit court convened in regular session Monday morning and a jury was drawn in the case of the East Jordan Light and Power Company vs. the East Jordan Copperage Company. This is developing into a hard fought case. Abbot & Abbot of Detroit are appearing for the plaintiff while H. W. Ening of Cleveland and E. N. Clink of East Jordan are looking after the interests of the defendants.

SECOND WEEK IN JULY

Date When Contestants in Flying Boat Contest Will Visit City.

Twelve Entries Now in Race—Several Are Expected Before Entries Close.

The later part of the week ending July 12 is the date on which the flying boats in the Great Lakes cruise from Chicago to Detroit will pass Charlevoix.

Twelve of the greatest aviators in the world are now entered in the event with a half dozen more to follow before entries close.

Charlevoix will be the last stop the contestants will make before reaching Petoskey and the fliers will proceed from here to Mackinac Island, where Sunday will be spent. On Sunday a contest ten times around the island for a $2,000 prize will be scheduled. Alpena, Cheboygan and Bay City are the other stops between the island and Detroit, where the finish will be made July 17.

The craft rise from and land on the water, but fly at an average altitude of from one hundred to two hundred feet while making a speed of seventy miles an hour.

Lieut. John H. Towers, the crack flier of the United States navy, and Glenn Curtiss are two of the more prominent entries. A passenger steamer will follow the boats with supplies, parts and the officials of the cruise.

STATE WIDE PROHIBITION

Will be Submitted to the Voters of Michigan by the Initiative.

At Fall Election of 1914—Fifty Thousand Signatures of Electors Required.

Taking advantage of the amendment to the constitution passed this spring, providing for the initiative on constitutional amendments, the Michigan Anti-Saloon league is preparing to send out a petition for the submission of a state-wide prohibition amendment to the voters in the fall election next year, the first opportunity to submit such an amendment.

The amendment is the same in wording as the one turned down by the legislature in the last session, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, barter or giving away of beers and liquors except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical or sacramental purposes, and if passed by the people would take effect May 1, 1915. It directs the legislature to pass laws carrying out its provisions.

The anti-saloonists are the first to take advantage of the initiative and declare they will be able to secure the necessary signatures very easily.

"The petition will be sent out within a few days," says Claude H. Stevens of Detroit, attorney for the league, "and our workers throughout the state will get signatures at once. Inasmuch as we have secured nearly 5,000 voters on local option questions in some single counties it will be an easy matter to get the necessary 50,000 signatures."

school house at Boyne City the contract price being $9,500. It is to be completed ready for occupancy by September 1.

Tuesday evening, 22 old soldiers and their wives, gave a pot luck surprise party to Comrade William Wallace at his home on State street. The surprise was given in honor of Comrade Wallace's sixty-ninth birthday. Of course they had a bully good time.

Lonis Bedwin returned home Friday night after spending the past three years in Gloucester, Massachusetts. He was accompanied by his wife, formerly Miss Nellie Harting of this city. The marriage took place the first of last week.

More traveling libraries and loan collections of pictures were issued by the state library to school districts this year than ever before. Already applications are being filed for the loan of framed pictures for next year, the supply being limited.

Rural districts in Michigan are demanding trained teachers and are willing to pay for them. People are beginning to realize that persons who assume the responsibility of training children in education and character building need training as much as the physician or the lawyer.

Joe Silverstein of Boyne City, who recently returned home from Los Angeles, California, reports that George W. Kent is looking very poorly and gets about only with great difficulty. He maintains his courage however and says he expects to return to Michigan before the summer closes.

Michigan is beginning to realize the economy of better school buildings. In 1911 Michigan erected 98 new school houses at a cost of one million dollars. It is estimated that the United States spends seventy million for public school buildings, exclusive of normals, colleges and universities.

Clad only in their night clothes with every avenue of escape shut off, save a second story window which opened on the kitchen roof, Mrs. Frank Steadman and daughter of Boyne City narrowly escaped cremation Sunday night. As it was the hair was partially burned from Mrs. Steadman's head.

The county road commissioners have decided on gravel roads for Boyne City and East Jordan and macedadam for the Charlevoix stretch. In this the best of judgment has been used as now they can prove by actual test the cost of building, wear and repairs that will be most valuable in future road building by the commission.

After July 1 there will be no more special register stamps. Mail to be registered after that date will be merely stamped with ten cents' worth of regular stamps and marked.

Peninsula grange met in regular session May 31, with an attendance of 18 members and three visitors and was called to order by the worthy master.

Brother Will Looze reported the purchase of a lantern for use in the sheds.

Worthy Master Ruhling, on behalf of the grange, presented Brother and Sister Chew with a silver meat fork, the occasion being their 22nd wedding anniversary. Harmony Grange Harmony Grange No 1431 is holding regular meetings, even if your correspondent does fail to send in a report of some of them. They are all interesting meetings too.

Our new Lecturer, Jas. Watt, has assigned some very practical topics for each meeting and seasoned the heavier discussions with a very liberal sprinkling of music, both vocal and instrumental, also recitations, stories and select readings. One of the interesting features of each meeting is a roll-call, which is responded to by the members in different ways at each meeting. Another feature which has been adopted by the grange is to have the master ask, as a regular order of business at each meeting if any member has anything to sell and if any member wishes to buy anything. We find it is a profitable addition to our work. At the last meeting the secretary was instructed to send for 50 lbs. of Paris green. One application for membership was received.

The question for discussion was, "Does our land need lime and if so where shall we obtain it?" It was brought out that the members had had no experience in using lime, most of them believing that the soil contains, naturally, enough lime. It was suggested that perhaps on the older fields an application of lime might be beneficial and that the cheapest and most convenient place to obtain it might be the marl beds near Deer Lake or some of the other lakes nearby.

PLAN CELEBRATION

Teachers are now being urged to arrange for the Perry Day Program

Perry Day is to be officially observed by the schools of Michigan on September 10, the hundredth anniversary of that notable victory of Perry and his fleet on Lake Erie. The importance of this victory to Michigan is incalculable so the department of public instruction is earnestly urging that Perry Day shall be fittingly observed in every schoolroom in the state. Teachers will necessarily have to begin planning their programs at once in order to be ready for the tenth of September as the date comes right at the beginning of the fall term.

It is suggested that the program be of a patriotic nature with suitable tributes to Perry and his heroes predominating. As the event is associated so closely with the history of the United States and of Michigan, the program is expected to give zest to the regular school program.

The legislature of Michigan at the recent session appropriated $30,000 to erect the million dollar memorial which is being erected at Put-in-Bay. The accepted design, when completed as contemplated, will cover, with its plaza, almost all the reservation dedicated as a park to the memorial. The plaza, rising in a gradual ascent from the water's edge to the level height of 12 feet, is 758 feet long and 461 feet wide. The Doric column in the center is 335 feet in height, from the base to the light on the tripod surmounting the cap, which is 300 feet high, with a spectators' gallery reached by electric elevators from the crypt at the base, where the bones of the dead in the battle of Lake Erie will be entered. The column is 45 feet in diameter at the base and 35 feet at the top—the highest monument in the world, with the exception of the Washington monument at the national capitol, and the highest column without exception. The material used in the column will be granite.

You will be satisfied if you get Moyer to hang your paper or do your painting or decorating. Leave orders at Central drug store, or call at 1207 Bridge street. All work guaranteed.—Adv. 19tf

Y. M. C. A. BOY'S CAMP

Site Chosen Two Miles From St. James on Font Lake.

DONATED BY W. J. GALLAGHER

Clearing Large Enough for Baseball Grounds and Other Recreations.

Camp Opens on Tuesday Afternoon July 8 and Closes on Friday Noon July 18—Visitors
Day will be Tuesday July 15.

Camping for boys is as old as time. Purposeful camping for boys is a comparatively new thing and the best thing. A go-as-you-please camp or a do-as-you-please camp soon becomes a place of moral deterioration. Character building might be given as the purpose of the Y. M. C. A. camp. It is to be a camp of ideals, not a summer hotel or a supplanter of the home. The principal reason for its existence is the providing of a safe place where parents can send their boys for a summer vacation, where, under the leadership of Christian men, they may be developed morally, physically, mentally and socially. The day of the extreme rough-house camp has passed. Boys have discovered that real fun does not mean hunting or discomforting others, but consists in making others happy. The boy who gets the most out of camp is the boy who puts the most into camp.

Growing things need the out of doors. Growing boys are in need of room and range. The medicine of the hills, the streams and the woods will rest tired nerves and return every boy to his home with increased vitality. Boys need to place themselves where nature can speak to them. They should get close to the soil. They ought to be toughened by sun and wind, rain and cold. Nothing can take the place of stout physique, robust health, good blood, firm muscles, sound nerves for these are the basis for character and efficiency. A trained brain is handicapped by an untrained and undeveloped body. Parents should think of the camp, not as a luxury or a good time only, but as something that is planned to meet the need in the lives of real boys. Many boys will come back with a new vision and inspiration of usefulness in their lives.

Equipment is not, but leadership is the foundation upon which a successful boys camp is built. An adult leader for six boys is necessary. These leaders have absolute control of all details concerning their respective groups and are at liberty to settle all questions that arise unless their importance makes it seem wise to refer them to the camp director. In securing camp leaders the aim of the committee is to secure young men of unquestionable character and moral leadership, men of culture and refinement, who are good athletes and understand boy life. No vacation can be so profitable spent as that given over to the leadership of boy life. Here is a form of altruistic service that should appeal to purposeful young men.

Charlevoix county is, of all the organized counties in Michigan, the best supplied with delightful camping sites. Along the shores of Pine Lake there are many, on the shores of Deer and Thumb Lakes are campsites that would make the secretaries of southern counties full of envy. After considering all of the available sites on the main land Beaver Island came up for consideration. It was found upon investigation that the island possessed all of the qualifications of any place on the main land and had numerous additional advantages that that made it, by far, the most satisfactory place to locate the First Annual Charlevoix County Y. M. C. A. Camp. The site chosen lies between Font Lake and the shore of Lake Michigan about two miles from the village of St. James. Here there is a clearing large enough for the baseball games and the track meets that are an important part of the camp life. The site was donated by W. J. Gallagher, who has volunteered to do all that lies within his power to make the camp a success and thus insure the happiness of the campers.

Camp will open on the afternoon of July 8th and close at noon on the eighteenth. This arrangement will make it possible for all the campers to return home that afternoon. Tuesday, July fifteenth will be Visitor's Day and arrangements are being made for an excursion to the island on that day, thus making it possible for parents, members of the county committee and all other interested parties to visit camp. However, if this date is not satisfactory to all who wish to visit the camp, they will be welcomed on any day that camp is in session.

A limited number of boys, twelve, thirteen, fourteen and fifteen years of age, may make application on the form provided.

Applications will be accepted in the order received until the limit has been reached. All applications must be in the hands of the county secretary, A. B. Ball, Boyne City, on or before the first day of July. Each application must be accompanied by an enrollment fee of one dollar and the balance of the camp expense, four dollars, is to be paid upon arrival at camp. This charge of five dollars pays for all items of camp expense but does not include transportation to and from St. James. From Boyne City and East Jordan the round trip will cost one dollar and fifty cents and from Charlevoix one dollar.

Further information regarding the camp will be furnished if application is made to the county secretary.

HOTEL BURNS TO GROUND

Walloon Hostelry is a $6,000 Loss—
Was Partly Insured.

Cause of Fire a Mystery—Men at Work in Building
Preparing to Re-open Hotel.

A raging fire totally destroyed the Hotel Walloon at Walloon Harbor, Walloon Lake, at ten o'clock Friday night with an estimated loss of $6,000 including the building and its contents. Bachelor Brothers, who are the proprietors carried $3,500 insurance on the building and $500 on the contents.

The hotel which was one of the finest on Walloon Lake had not been occupied since last summer. The hotel was built in the rustic fashion in a sequestered nook of the woods. Preparations were under way for the re-opening for the summer season.

The blaze had gained great headway when discovered by Mrs. Girard, who lived in a cottage nearby. Before she could awaken Mr. Bachelor the roof had fallen in. Two men from Boyne City were working in the building during the day and Mr. Bachelor was with them and says no one was smoking and that he is certain their visit had no bearing on the fire.

PETOSKEY BOY DROWNED

Falls of G. R. & I. Trestle at Bear River Near Paper Mill.

While attempting to cross the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad trestle spanning the Bear River at Petoskey Saturday night, Herbert, the seven-year-old son of Mr. and Charles Riese, lost his balance and plunged to his death in the river. Edward Stradlerberg and Clinton Swift were on a raft nearby when the boy fell but were unable to lend any assistance.

A party of searchers was at once summoned and the body was recovered at 9:20. All efforts to bring the youth back to life were in vain. The body was somewhat bruised and it is the belief that the fall stunned the child or that he struck some object in the descent to death.

Herbert was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Riese who survive together with a three-year-old sister, Helen. The funeral was held at two o'clock Tuesday with interment in Greenwood Cemetery.

Coming June 23.

Monday June 23 is the date when J. Leahy, the Optometrist will be at Baker's Inn, one day only, headache cured, crossed eyes straightened. Glasses guaranteed to fit.—Adv. 2412

GLENN M. DuBOIS

The citizens of Charlevoix were startled Sunday morning by the announcement of the death of Glenn M. DuBois, editor of the Charlevoix Courier. Mr. DuBois succumbed after a affliction of a most chronic case of asthma, at 2:00 p. m., his strength and health rapidly sinking the past three weeks. Mr. DuBois was at the office attending to his duties Saturday and was apparently easy, although very weak.

Glenn M. DuBois was born in Ithaca, Gratiot county, Michigan, September 19, 1872, where he spent his early life on the farm. He gained an exceptional education and was prominent in all phases of life in his early manhood. Mr. DuBois came to this city in October 1907, being a member of the firm of DuBois & Usher, who took possession of the Courier at that time. He has always been active and prominent in county politics and is well known throughout the state. With the exception of one winter when he went to Florida for his health, Mr. DuBois has edited the Courier since coming to this city.

Mr. DuBois was a member of the I. O. O. F. lodge and of the Grange. He had passed every chair in the Odd Fellows order and was a member of the Encampment. In the Grange he was a most active worker, having reached the highest position, being a member of the Pomona, State and National Grange. In the past fifteen years he had not missed a meeting of the state grange. He was master of the Gratiot County Pomona Grange at the time of removing to Charlevoix and was master of Charlevoix Grange at time of death. As a citizen Mr. DuBois was a man of high ideals, ever ready to advance the welfare and good of everyone. He always advocated the best demands of the public at large and stood ready to lend his influence in their behalf. While not active in city politics Mr. DuBois was always ready to aid the government of our community in any respect when called upon. As editor of the Courier he has built up a host of friends as well as made the Courier one of the best papers for home news in this county, his pleasant personality gaining much in that field.

During the time he has lived in Charlevoix those who have had business relations with Mr. DuBois discovered that his character was like a mirror, in which nothing was concealed, all was frank and open, and that he was more than fair in his dealings. Lenient with all, frequently aiding those who needed aid, esteeming honesty and loyalty, Mr. DuBois was inflexible only in fulfilling his own promises and undertakings.

He affiliated himself with no church during his life time, saying that his creed was "malice toward none and charity for all." He lived to this ideal.

Mr. DuBois laid down the burden of this life to enter, as we believe, a higher plane of existence, at 2 o'clock a. m., Sunday, June 9, after suffering continually for over 13 years from asthma. He is survived by his aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. George M. DuBois of this city and a sister, Mrs. A. J. Usher also of this city, and a host of friends here and at his former home in Gratiot county. No man was his enemy, and he numbered his friends by the entire community. At the time of his death he was forty years, 8 months and 19 days old.

The funeral services were held from the Baptist church under the auspices of the I. O. O. F. lodge Tuesday forenoon at 10:30, Rev. Atchison officiating. The remains were laid to rest in Brookside Cemetery.

PETOSKEY GETS BIG CONVENTION

Michigan Elks Will Hold Annual Meeting in Sister City Next Year.

Big Crowd Will be Present—Eugene L. Rose of Same City Was Chosen President.

Eugene L. Rose of Petoskey was elected president of Michigan Elks at the state convention held at Port Huron last week, defeating Shirley Stewart of Port Huron by five votes. Petoskey was granted the next convention, being unopposed in the race. Pontiac registered a boost for the convention in 1916, Grand Rapids practically clinching the delegation for 1913.

The following are the new officers:

President, Eugene L. Rose; first vice president, Shirley Stewart; second vice president, Judge Z. L. Granshaw; third vice president, W. L. Andrews, Grand Haven; trustees, N. A. Abel, Jackson, and D. B. Peters, Benton Harbor; secretary, George Bostock, Grand Rapids; treasurer, Charles Mannon, Houghton.

Shirley Stewart introduced a resolution which was adopted by a unanimous vote complimenting Editor Williams of Detroit of the American Elk for his fight for a national home other than the one at Bedford City, Kentucky.

The big parade was held at noon Wednesday with 1,500 of the audience following in line. Detroit, Bay City, Saginaw, Grand Rapids, Petoskey and Pontiac were particularly well represented.

TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND

Dollars Fire Loss in Big Fire at Petoskey
Last Friday Morning.

William L. McManus Planing Mill and Martin Grocery Store a Total Loss.

Gaining headway with remarkable rapidity, fire which started from unknown causes in the matchroom completely destroyed the planing mill of the W. L. McManus Lumber company with a loss of approximately $200,000 Friday morning.

The blaze was discovered at 5:30 by watchmen, who turned in two alarms. The signals failed to work and the companies did not respond till about fifteen minutes after the blaze was discovered.

The loss includes the destruction of the lumber office and the Martin & Son grocery store building, which also was McManus property. There was absolutely no insurance on the mill, but the McManus carried $1,000 on their stock, which will about half cover it.

The McManus Lumber company is the largest industrial concern in the city, operating a shingle mill in addition to the planing mill. The planing mill was filled with finished lumber and a new finishing machine had recently been installed.

A box car belonging to the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad and filled with finished lumber, standing on a side track by the mill, was destroyed and the morning north-bound train, due at 6 o'clock, was delayed several hours.

The fire was the most spectacular ever seen here. The flames lit the whole city and smoke arose in dense volumes.

Shortly after the fire started, while the bystanders were hoping for rain as an aid to the firemen, the clouds opened and hailstones fully the size of large marbles fell to the street for a few minutes.

W. L. McManus, jr., manager of the company and ex-mayor of Petoskey, was not in the city, having not yet returned from the Elks' convention at Port Huron. He is the exalted ruler of the local lodge.

When the fire was discovered the flames were sweeping toward the business portion of the city and threatened to destroy the W. L. McManus, Sr., residence nearby. These flames would have been beyond control and probably would have wiped out several business blocks had the wind not changed. Water was played on neighboring houses and electric light and telegraph poles to prevent loss of property and life.

A number of the city firemen, who were attending the state firemen's convention at Cheboygan, returned home only last night. J. E. Martin, senior member of the grocery firm which suffered, is at Ann Arbor attending the illness of his wife.

The fire is one of the most severe industrial blows Petoskey has ever experienced, but it is expected the company will rebuild.

Is your property insured? If not, see Myrtle Young & Son.—Adv.

Pythian Memorial.

Pine Lake Lodge No. 122 will observe memorial day, Sunday June 15. The members are requested to meet at the hall at 10:30, and march to the Congregational church in a body, where a special memorial address will be given by Rev. C. E. Taggart. Preparations have also been made for special music. All members are earnestly requested to turn out.

TWO EXCELLENT MOTOR CRUISERS

Boats Built by Will C. Bellinger and Franklin Sears.

Are Now Moored in Round Lake—Both Boats Equipped for Cruising Accommodations.

Two sturdy little motor cruisers have just been launched in Round Lake, one by Franklin Sears and the other by Will C. Bellinger. The boats are up-to-date models and are excellent for accommodating small parties.

Each of the cruisers are thirty feet three inches long and eight feet five inches beam of two feet two inches draft. The construction is very heavy, the keels being four inches by six inches yellow pine, all deadwood, stem, etc., of oak, sided four inches. The frame is one and one-half inches square, spaced nine inch centers, planking one inch cypress.

Each boat has four berths, a toilet, a galley, a chain locker and engine room inside, under raised deck, with a head room of five feet ten inches. Each boat has a self-bailing cockpit and a seating capacity of about twelve people.

The designs were originally from Bowes & Moyer of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, published in the Rudolph Magazine and same being laid down by Bellinger. Both the young men are amateur boat builders, this being Sears' first attempt in boat construction. The boats are a fine addition to the local fleet and make a good showing moored in Round Lake.

One of the cruisers is painted white and the other is black. Both boats are up to expectations and show clever workmanship and ability. One boat makes eight and one-half miles an hour with a seven and one-half H. P. heavy duty Fairbanks-Morse Motor. The other nine miles per hour with a 12 H. P. Medium Duty Motor.

Attends Convention.

Henry D. Marshall, chief of the Charlevoix Fire Department attended the State Firemen's convention at Cheboygan last week. He reports that the meeting was interesting, instructive and that the people of Cheboygan put forth every possible effort for the entertainment of every fireman present. About 40 cities in the state were represented at the convention and on Wednesday all were taken for a trip to Mackinac Island where they were shown about by Supt. F. A. Kenyon.

HOW TO SOW ALFALFA SEED

Preparation of Ground Depends Greatly on Success of the Crop.

USE PLENTY OF LIME STONE

Burned Lime Can Also be Used, But Agricultural is the Best.

Should be Harrowed in Well—Advise Sowing Seed as Early in June as Possible And Always Both Ways of Field.

Select a good piece of ground that is well drained, plowed deeply in the fall, and in the spring fit up as good as you can, making a good seed bed. The land should be limed. If you can get ground limestone, use two or three tons per acre. Burned lime may be used, say one ton per acre. Agricultural lime is the easiest to apply and gives quicker results than the ground limestone.

After applying the lime, harrow it in well and if the land is weedy, cultivate often until all weeds are destroyed. Sow the seed as early in June as you can. Use the best seed you can secure and try to get seed grown on dry land. Irrigated grown seed does not do as well as that grown on dry land.

Sow 20 pounds alfalfa seed per acre and add 5 pounds medium clover seed per acre, making 25 bushels seed per acre. I find it pays to sow one-half of this one way of the field and the other half the other way, as we get it on more evenly. It is also better to sow by hand with a broadcast seeder, as the drill puts it in too deep and in rows, while it is better to have it evenly distributed over the ground. After sowing, harrow to cover seed lightly, with a spike-tooth harrow.

Many people ask why I put the medium clover with the alfalfa. I do this for several reasons: First, it comes up so thickly, it helps to keep down the weeds. Second, the red clover is sure to grow and I always find it helps to shade the ground for the young alfalfa plants and makes a good thick stand to help shade the ground during the dry time we almost always get in July and August.

The first crop of alfalfa does not get very thick, but by having the clover with it we get a good crop of hay. The second crop is light and the third a good heavy one, as the clover comes out on second crop by that time. The second year we have the same result, and the third year the clover is all gone and the alfalfa is strong enough to give a good crop alone. It does not take any longer to mow a good crop than it does a light one and takes no more time to rake it. We can all well afford to handle it, as we get about twice as much and the hay is almost as good mixed as the pure alfalfa would be.

If you have never raised alfalfa, it is best to imitate the seed. This can be done by sending to the Agricultural College for the alfalfa culture, which cost 43 cents. This is enough for one bushel seed. A still better way is to get some soil from an alfalfa field and sprinkle five hundred pounds over each acre of your field. This should be done on a cloudy day or in the evening. It does when the sun is hot it is liable to kill the bacteria. It put on in the evening and dragged over they will get deep enough in the ground by morning to protect themselves from the sun's rays. If you cannot get soil from an alfalfa field, and can find a sweet clover patch where you can get the soil, it is just as good, because the bacteria is the same as on alfalfa. Some people sow sweet clover to inoculate the soil, plowing it under when it has a good start, and then sow their alfalfa. This a good plan when the soil is sandy and rather light. Sweet clover will grow where nothing else will. Sandy soil can be built up to that way so that alfalfa will grow. It does well, because the ground is inoculated and it has the sweet clover to feed upon until it gets a good root, when it will grow if the soil is not too poor and is not acid.

It is well to use lime on all alfalfa. (Continued on page 3.)

Farm Dairying

Model Type of Ayrshire

XIV.—Milk and Cream Trade Byproducts.

By LAURA ROSE, Demonstrator and Lecturer in Dairying at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

(Copyright, 1911, by A. C. McClurg & Co.)

THESE are no more remunerative method of disposing of milk and cream from the farm than supplying the retail trade.

At the present time there are few industries which if viewed in the proper light present such a serious aspect.

Milk is almost the sole food of the infant man the first year or two of his life. He depends entirely on it during his earliest and most helpless period.

A great number of babies have to depend solely on cows' milk for their nourishment. The purity of the milk has a marked influence on the health of the child. Milk laden with bacteria is always more or less unwholesome and may to infants be actually and actively poisonous, giving rise to vomiting, diarrhea and gastro-intestinal disturbances. I would not unduly alarm, but to read statistics of the mortality of infants and to see the great number of deaths said to be directly attributed to bad milk make one shudder at what is before us. It appears like murder without intent.

These conditions exist mostly in large cities where the milk is shipped from all quarters for great distances.

When a farmer sends off a can of milk he has no idea into what homes it finds its way. Some is likely to go to feed a tiny baby, some the very sick and some the enfeebled aged—all with weak digestion and low vitality, all depending on the milk to strengthen and build them up.

The man who supplies a city or town, milk trade should think of these things: should think of the lives he really holds in his keeping. The cow has little to answer for personally in regard to bad milk.

There are but two things necessary to keep the milk pure and sweet. Keep the milk clean, then the bacterial count will be low. Quickly cool the milk and keep it cold, and the bacteria which are in it will cease to develop. Pasteurization is recommended, but where the other two requirements are rigidly enforced it is not necessary.

Besides, pasteurized milk does not agree with every one.

In some provinces and states there is legislation regarding the percentage of fat and total solids in milk. Vastly more important is it that a certain standard of purity be enforced. There is no more vital food problem than that of the milk supply. Some go so far as to say that dairy farms should be under municipal management, just the same as the water system. Every detail of the milk trade would then be under special inspection, which should result in supplying purer milk and lowering the death rate among infants.

Milk For Retail.

The ideal method for preparing milk for retail is, first, to have the milk of best quality. Take it to the milk room, separate from the stable and immediately cool it to 45 degrees. Then put it in sterilized bottles and seal the tops with paraffined paper caps. It should be shipped as soon as possible, either packed in ice or in refrigerator cars. Milk should reach the consumer not later than twenty-four hours after it is drawn.

When we see oysters, ice cream, etc., carried in paper pails the paper milk bottle only comes into use in the near future. It certainly would do away with the dread of badly washed glass bottles.

As bacteria lurk in the crevices of imperfectly cleaned vessels, all pails and cans in which milk is placed should be thoroughly cleaned and scalded. It is most important that there be no hidden nooks and corners in the hardware. Blunt seams and crevices are breeding places for the worst forms of germ life. A liberal use of solder renders the inside of pails, cans, dippers and strainers perfectly smooth and cleanable.

Not until we get the consumers roused to the importance of clean milk will conditions greatly improve. To most of them milk is milk, and that is the beginning and end of it. They should be concerned about its source.

Are the cows healthy? Is the milking done in a cleanly manner? Is there any contagious disease among the attendants? These are questions about which the housewife should concern herself. When milk is guaranteed pure it usually commands a higher price. Extra precaution entails extra expense.

The milk often becomes bad after it is received from the milkman because it is not properly cared for in the home. Too frequently the milk is put into a jug or pail which has only been rinsed since being supplied of milk. All milk vessels must be scalded. Another bad practice is allowing the milk to stand on the kitchen table or in some other warm place. The milk should be evaporated and kept in a cool, clean place.

It is a good plan to place a square of clean wet cotton over the milk picher. In warm weather, when souring is feared, it is a wise precaution to heat it to 185 degrees and quickly cool it. Danger from disease germs also is averted by doing this.

The souring of milk during a thunderstorm is due not to the thunder, but to the warm, sultry weather preceding the storm, making conditions favorable to the rapid growth of bacteria.

Do not place a bowl or jug on the door step for the milkman to fill. The dust falling into it may be sufficient to spoil the milk.

The Cream Trade.

Cream for retail should receive the same care as milk. Cream is generally sold by the quart or gallon and should be of a standard per cent of fat. Commercial or single cream usually contains from 20 to 25 per cent fat. Double cream 40 per cent. It takes three and one-third pints of 20 per cent cream to make a pound of butter. By comparing the price obtained for cream with that for butter, one can ascertain which is the better way of disposing of the cream. Practically speaking, 100 pounds of 4 per cent milk will make 20 pounds (two gallons) of 25 per cent cream.

It is a crime to add to the milk or cream any preservative. There are few, if any, that are not injurious, and many are really poisonous. Agents will sell a powder or solution which, if used to rinse the cans, will prevent the milk from souring. Surely such an argument should arouse suspicion. These so called remedies have been known to contain enough formaldehyde (a poison) to be dangerously harmful.

The farmer may add a little preservative, saying, "This place cannot do any harm." The wholesome man, not knowing what has already been done, adds his small portion, and the retail dealer, who runs the greatest risk of the milk souring, puts in an extra dose. No one is able to sum up the sad results.

When ordinary milk does not sour under usual conditions within a reasonable time, there is something wrong.

Note attention is each year being given to the retail trade. Legislative sanitary inspection of the milk, cows and stables and the establishing of pure milk depots to supply milk for infants especially are lessening the evils.

Milk produced under the best of conditions, cooled immediately and bottled has been kept sweet for eighteen days in the heat of summer. The milk was not pasteurized.

Cleanliness and prompt cooling were the only preservatives. We can recommend no others.

Milk Definitions.

Standard milk is milk which conforms to certain requirements which usually specify the minimum per cent of fat, and solids not fat, and sometimes the maximum number of bacteria per cubic centimeter allowable in milk offered for sale. The amounts required or permitted differ in different countries.

Sanitary milk, guaranteed milk, are terms applied to milk produced under conditions necessary to secure a pure, wholesome product.

Certified milk is milk produced under ideal conditions—healthy cows, especially adapted sanitary stables, healthy clean milkers. The milk is bottled, sealed and shipped in refrigerator cars and certified to by a commission.

Modified milk, or humanized milk, is milk containing definite proportions of fat, sugar, casein, etc., put up usually according to the prescription of a physician, who indicates how much of these different constituents is required.

Clarified milk is milk which has been run through a separator to remove some of the impurities. The skim milk and cream are afterward mixed.

Pasteurized milk or cream is milk or cream which has been heated below the boiling point, but sufficiently to kill most of the active organisms present and immediately cooled to 50 degrees or below. Pasteurizing temperatures range from 140 to 185 degrees.

Sterilized milk is milk that has been heated to the temperature of boiling water (212 degrees) or higher for a length of time sufficient to kill all organisms present.

Condensed or evaporated milk is milk from which a considerable portion of water has been evaporated. The sweetened brands contain a high percentage of cane sugar.

Peptonized milk is milk to which some peptin has been added in order to make the milk more easily digested.

Electrified milk is treated by a current of electricity for the purpose of destroying bacteria.

Malted milk is milk that has been pasteurized to destroy the bacteria, then partly condensed, and a small quantity of malt added.

Milk powder is obtained by evaporating the milk from whole milk, partly skimmed milk or skim milk. The powder is used by confectioners, certain manufacturers, surveying parties and in such countries as the basin of the Yukon.

Kommiss is the product made by the alcoholic fermentation of milk caused by adding yeast and sugar to it.

Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS

Copyright, 1911, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

CHAPTER II.

Mary Todhunter Entertains the Green Eyed Monster.

COLONEL TODHUNTER was seated in his favorite cane-bottomed armchair at the far end of the wide "gallery" extending across the entire front of his home, an old fashioned colonial house of hospitable aspect. With Mrs. Todhunter he had just returned from the Daughters of the Confederacy picnic, and they were awaiting the arrival of Mary and her escort, Stam Tucker, before having supper.

The Todhunter residence stood on the crest of a gentle slope overlooking the pleasing sweep of Missouri countryside that intervened between the town of Nineveh and the colony's own peaceful fields of growing corn. Mrs. Todhunter sat close to her husband, her hands folded in her lap, her happiness sweetened eyes contemplating the pastoral picture that had come to seem a vital part of her own life.

"They'd better be nighly quick about gettin' here if they know what's good for 'em," grumbled Colonel Todhunter wistfully. "I'm as hungry as a young hound dog this very minute. I'll be shot full of holes if my stomach don't feel like my throat's cut. Mary—! could eat a griddlestone right now if somebody'd bust it up and pass it to me on a plate for real vittles!"

"You ought to be ashamed of your self," Colonel Todhunter, smiled Mrs. Todhunter, "after that dinner you ate at the Daughters' picnic. I declare to goodness I was afraid they'd all think you never got anything fit to eat at home."

"When I'm ashamed of having a good appetite, Mary," replied Colonel Todhunter, "and specially if I ever come to that day when I ain't got it, I'll ask the Old Marsler up above to call me to my heavenly home. 'Tis nigh no man got a right to turn away from wholesome vittles when the good Lord's been bountiful enough to provide 'em for that man's eatin'. Nature don't never give a man such a right if he gets so he can't relish his food. 'Tis one of her punishments for his playin' tom fool with himself, sinna and skylarkin' around. And I ain't never seen no trifter at meal times that was fit to do a man's work."

Mrs. Todhunter laughed outright. "If you're eating to get ready for hard work, Colonel Todhunter, I'm certainly glad to see you eat hearty, because you're likely to be kept mighty busy nominatin' Colonel Strickland for governor of Missouri. You could nominate yourself a heap easier."

"Maybe I could, honey," replied Colonel Todhunter, "but Bill Strickland's a mighty popular man, all the same, and he deserves to be. I reckon I could be elected easier'n him, too, knowin' him all over every Democrat in Missouri, but I'd make a mighty poor governor. You got to handle some s'ill fussed messy customers in politics, and I ain't got patience enough to handle 'em right. That's exactly where old Bill Strickland's got me beat. He can use all sorts o' men, crooked and straight, to gain honest ends—he proved it when he was chairman of the state committee—and that's what a governor's got to do to accomplish anything worth while. That's why I'm workin' for Bill Strickland. He ain't only my friend—he's far and away the best man for governor of Missouri visible to the naked eye at the present writin'."

Mrs. Todhunter's comprehending eyes rested softly on the colonel's grizzled visage. "Thursen," she said, "I know better than that. I know better than you do why you'd rather have Colonel Strickland run for governor than to run yourself. 'Tis because they couldn't pull you away from Nineveh and this old home of ours with a yoke of oxen."

"Something of incredulous surprise flashed into Colonel Todhunter's face. Then his eyes swept longly across the familiar Missouri landscape spread out before him. He looked at Mrs. Todhunter and smiled.

"I reckon you've guessed it, honey," he spoke at last, almost wonderingly. "But I'll be tarred and feathered if I ever realized it until you told me. The good Lord above us, Mary, if I was elected governor and knew I had to live up yonder in Jeff City for four years I'd die of homesickness the first dash out o' the box. Th' sh'n't no money and no fame could pay me for doin' it, suh."

Mrs. Todhunter's eyes gleamed with laughter. "That's you all over, Thursen, and I wouldn't have you changed a speck, not for anything in the world. No, not even if the dear Lord himself told me he was willin' to do it."

Colonel Todhunter contemplated his wife gravely. "That's a mighty lucky thing, Mary," he replied then, his eyes twinkling just a trifle. "Lucky for you and a blessed sight luckier for me, 'cause I reckon I got to stay just like I am to the end of the chapter, honey."

At that moment the sound of young voices was heard from the twilight shadowed avenue leading up to the house. Then a huggy drawn by a high stepping bay mare came into view.

"That's Mary and Stam Tucker now," said Mrs. Todhunter. "And I'm glad Mary's home. I don't like that skittish horse Stam Tucker drives."

"That there mare o' Stam's sh'n't a bit more skittish than Mary Todhunter herself," Colonel Todhunter responded, chuckling. "And they're both a-goin' to give Stam the surprise of his life one o' these days. Just look at Mary, honey! You'd think she was a kitten set right down by a saucer o' cream. She's so tickled. She's havin' a good time with Stam Tucker as if they want no such young man as Tom Strickland in all the world. And right this minute she wouldn't give Tom Strickland's little finger for Stam Tucker's whole body and soul and all old Eph Tucker's money thrown in to boot!"

Mrs. Todhunter laughed lightly. "Mary's just beginnin' to receive company, Colonel Todhunter," she expounded. "And, like all girls, she wants to have a good time with her beaux. If it don't happen to be Tom Strickland that's handy it'll be Stam Tucker. And if it isn't Stam it'll be somebody else."

"Mrs. Todhunter," returned the colonel, "you're wastin' your breath tellin' me things like that. I know Mary Todhunter, and I know you when you was Mary Todhunter's age. If she ain't the livin' likeness of what you was then I'll eat my hat, so what can you tell me that I don't know already? Tom Strickland will have his hands full bringin' her to a standstill, I tell you."

By this time Mary and her escort had reached the house and Stam Tucker was assisting her from the buggy. Mrs. Todhunter and the colonel advanced to meet them.

"You've got to stay to supper, Stam," said Mrs. Todhunter. "I know you must be good and hungry, and Colonel Todhunter will have old Jupiter take your horse around to the stable. You and Mary come right in now."

Stam Tucker gladly accepted the invitation, the colonel calling to old Uncle Jupiter, the faithful family retainer, to take charge of the bay mare, and then the Todhunters and their guest went in to supper.

But, hungry though he had declared himself and grateful as was the Mrs. sonal supper of fried chicken, etc.

"You've got to stay to supper, Stam," said Mrs. Todhunter.

bread, butter beans and corn on the ear, with coffee made under Mrs. Todhunter's own supervision. Colonel Todhunter found time to divert himself vastly with the two young people.

"You boys and girls these days are a mighty low spirited lot," he announced gravely. "I was a-studyin' all of you at the Daughters' picnic, and I never in all my born days saw young folks miss so many chances for havin' fun."

"Why, 'father?" indignantly cried Mary. "I think we had the nicest kind of a time. I know I did, anyway. Didn't you, Mr. Tucker?"

"Indeed, I did, Miss Mary," promptly replied Stam Tucker, but with a discomfiting recollection of Tom Strickland in his mind. "And it certainly was a big success for the Daughters too. They must have made a lot for the Soldiers' home. I should think."

"They'd ha' made a lot more," said Colonel Todhunter. "If you young people had been more'n half alive. What the Daughters ought to ha' done was to have a good old fashioned fiddle or there and got up a big barn dance chargin' everybody extra for dancin'."

"A barn dance—ah!" mocked Mary. "her pretty nose uptilted. 'Tid like to see myself takin' part in a barn dance. Just like we were livin' in the back woods."

"You'd see yourself enjoyin' a mighty fine frolic if you did, young lady," declared the colonel valiantly. "Good old Virginia reeds and cotillions and a mazurka and schottische or two and welched in between 'em sh'n't to be sneezed at, let me tell you."

The speaker glared at the scornful young couple. Then he chuckled. "And you ought to be playin' kissin' games too," he resumed. "Spin the plate and 'Pleased as displeased' and 'Heavy, heavy, hangs over your head.' Great name above, th' sh'n't outlin' like them there old games for makin' young people real sociable."

"Course it's old fashioned," agreed Colonel Todhunter, the light of mischief teasing in his eyes. "So is kissin' itself, for that matter. But I won't trust none of you Nineveh girls to blind the door when there's any kissin' goin' on, old fashioned or no old fashioned, Miss Mary Todhunter!"

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, 'father!" cried Mary, indignantly. "What in the world will Mr. Tucker think?"

"I don't care what Stam thinks, 't's true all the same," returned Colonel Todhunter gravely. "And what's in it to be ashamed of? The trouble with you young folks nowadays is that you are skeered to death o' bein' natural. You know you've got to play the old game, but you think you're smart enough to play it in a new way and you ain't. All you do is to spoil the game like today. I didn't see sry single one o' you do a real natural thing from beginnin' to end, and had my eyes peeled every last blessed minute!"

"I can vouch for that," laughed Mrs. Todhunter. "You can't keep yourself out of young people's affairs to save your life, Thursen."

"I want to help 'em along, that's why," chuckled Colonel Todhunter. "But I must say I had mighty hard sleidin' on that there job this day."

At this every one laughed. "Anyways," continued Colonel Todhunter as they left the supper table and returned to the front gallery, "it's more the fault o' the young men than it is of the girls. I'll be dam-!fagged if it ain't. I never saw such a lot of 'em run-if-you-touch-me beaux since the good Lord made me. Ain't that so, Stam?"

"I hope not, colonel," replied Stam Tucker, laughing. "I certainly did my best to give Miss Mary and the other young ladies a good time." He looked a bit reproachfully at Mary as he spoke.

"Indeed you did, Stam," said Mary quickly, remembering Tom Strickland's better treatment by her. "You're just as nice an escort as any girl could ask."

Colonel Todhunter snorted. "Long sufferin' patience!" he mocked. "That's just the trouble, Stam Tucker! All you Nineveh boys are good enough when it comes to 'fettlin' and carryin' for the girls, but that don't count for much. The sort o' man they like is the man that bosses 'em around, that throws his handkerchief at 'em and makes 'em come when he calls, and none of you Nineveh sparks seems to have sand enough for that. You needn't tell me you've got it, Stam Tucker, and not even Tom Strickland!"

"Speak of the angels, colonel," Tom Strickland's own voice interposed from the lowest step of the gallery, "and you hear the datter of his wings!"

"No! I don't not by a jagful," retorted Colonel Todhunter, snarled. "When any of you Stricklands begin sproutin' wings, the world's comin' to an end. How are you, Tom? I didn't know you were there!"

"Why didn't you come in to supper, Tom?" asked Mrs. Todhunter.

"I had supper at home, thank you, Mrs. Todhunter," answered the young man, according to join the little group as he spoke. "Howdy, Miss Mary! Hope you're not feelin' tired after the picnic. How are you, Stam?"

The jealous antagonism between the two young men made itself instantly felt. Stam Tucker plainly resented Tom's entrance upon the scene. The latter as plainly showed that he had come purposely to be in his rival's way. The situation was greatly to Colonel Todhunter's humorous liking.

"Well, well!" he exclaimed innocently. "Gent Scott and Maria, you must have hot footed it away from your vittles, young man! If your daddy'll only get such a move on for governor we'll win hands down!"

Tom Strickland laughed. "It all depends, colonel," he made pointed answer. "on how badly my father wants to be governor. If he wants it half as bad as I wanted to call on Miss Mary this evening, I'll back him for a winner against all comers!"

The note of challenge was unmistakable. Stam Tucker's face darkened with anger. Mary Todhunter blushed to the roots of her hair. The colonel's grin, lips, twitched with amused approval, his eyes twinkling under their shaggy gray brows. But Mrs. Todhunter came to the rescue with some placid remark that eased the momentary strain.

A little later she and Colonel Todhunter withdrew to their own end of the gallery, leaving Mary to entertain her callers. Colonel Todhunter was vastly tickled.

"Lord, Mary," he confided to his wife, "them—two—young—rascals wouldn't like nothin' better'n to get at each other, hammer and tongs, this very minute! I declare, honey, this here old world of our'n don't change a bit. It's precisely like our own young days. I'll be eternally witnessin' if it sh'n't, and it's been that way for all time—as it was in the beginnin', is now and ever shall be, world without end, amen!"

And so profoundly interested was the colonel that he would gladly have indulged to see which of the two young men "sat the other out," had not Mrs. Todhunter fairly compelled him to accompany her into the house at last. It was with a sigh of genuine disappointment that he arose to do her bidding.

"Bless my soul, it's as good as a show!" he said. "But I don't wonder you pull me away from seein' it, Mrs. Todhunter. Your daughter Mary's playin' every one twixkin' under their over again. You've got good reason for not wantin' me to keep tab on 'em at this late day, namin'."

SUCCESS

— Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.

— In business most men fail even to get a start, because they lack money.

— The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.

"You're right, honey," he spoke finally. "Good Lord above us! I'm just as much a part of all this as our old house here—or the trees and the grass and them there cornfields 'way 'cross the pike yonder. Go 'way from Nineveh! Why, they'd have to pull me up by the roots to make me do it, suh!"

CHAPTER III.

"For Governor, William J. Strickland of Nineveh."

COLONEL TODHUNTER's heart swelled with an unselfish pridefulness.

The favorite old Mississippi steamer, Gray Eagle, now in full view from where he stood at the Nineveh landing, was bringing homeward the Hon. William J. Strickland of Nineveh, at last an avowed candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Missouri.

Colonel Todhunter himself had organized the public reception at this very moment awaiting the most distinguished of Nineveh's citizens. "I'll be shot full of holes, suh," he said to Dick Cantrill, editor and proprietor of the Nineveh Weekly Blade. "If we don't show the people of this here state what old Bill Strickland's home folks think of him, anyways, Th' ain't nothin' more helpful to a candidate than, provin' that them as knows the most about him has the least against him, suh."

"What about Spurple Tucker's opposition, colonel?" asked Dick Cantrill.

"That's better'n his indorsement, suh!" retorted Colonel Todhunter. "Long as I've known Bill Strickland if I knew old Eph Tucker was supportin' him I'd be against him on suspection, suh, blamed if I wouldn't!"

Men's Bible Class.

Last Sunday Hon. S. A. Correll, Judge of Probate gave the class some account of the convention of corrections and charities held at Ann Arbor the preceding week and which he attended as the class delegate. The Judge evidently had his eyes and ears open all the while he was there and in a very lucid manner gave us something of the purpose of the meeting and the scope of the discussions. The Judge dwelt particularly on what was said and done with reference to truancy and modern prisons. So well pleased were the class with what the Judge gave them that they unanimously requested him to tell them more about these matters at a later date.

Next Sunday Rev. C. E. Taggart will address the class on the subject on Christian Socialism. A discussion will follow Mr. Taggart's address and it is hoped that the hour will be very interesting and profitable one.

Farewell Surprise.

Mrs. Amanda Moore of Gloucester, Mass., was pleasantly surprised Thursday afternoon at her home on Main Street. The ladies presented Mrs. Moore with some table linen as a remembrance. The ladies present were Mesdames William Hartzig, Louis Allard, Phil Beaudan, George Hillanger, Angie Olney, William Geer, James Nason, Charles Jones, Pete Tysver, Garnet Shores and Ray Dorrance, also the mother of Mrs. Dorrance. At 4:00 o'clock a dainty lunch was served and all departed for home. Mrs. Moore will soon soon return to Charlevoix.

Additional Local

The baccalaureate sermon delivered by Rev. Taggart at the Congregational church Sunday evening, to the graduating class of 1913, was a very pleasing address, his subject being, "Be Ready."

Elk Rapids Hustlers recently raised a fund by popular subscription to build a large aquarium for the purpose of exhibiting the fish of the streams and lakes to the strangers who visit that city.

A slight blaze in the roof of the home of Mrs. O'Neil on Hurlburt avenue called the fire department out at six o'clock Monday evening. The fire was soon extinguished with slight damage. A spark from the burning chimney is thought to have ignited the roof.

Invitations are out announcing the coming marriage of Clarence N. Durance formerly of this city, to Miss Mable Estelle Sontag of Seattle, Washington, on Thursday June 19, at six o'clock at the Ravenna Methodist church at that place. Mr. Durance is a son of Jones Durance.

There may be some man or woman in this community who would be glad to provide an outing at the County Y. M. C. A. camp for a deserving boy, who otherwise could not go. Think the matter over and write the secretary giving the name of the boy you wish to send.

Hubert Paddock who is attending school at Annapolis in the military academy has gained a remarkable standing in that institution, being a second classman. He also stood second in deportment in a class of 198 for the year. He left Saturday on a battleship for the summer cruise.

Beginning June 1, and continuing all this month, the rural mail carriers must weigh, count and classify all the mail they handle, and keep a separate account of all postage stamps, post office orders, registered packages and parcel post stamps and packages that pass through their hands.

The ravages of the lent caterpillar among the shade trees of the village have reached such alarming proportions that the authorities decided that some action was necessary if the trees were to be saved and Street Commissioner Frank Dunn was sent out Tuesday morning with a power spraying outfit in an endeavor to poison the pest.—Bel-laire Independent.

Only 180 school district representing 40 counties in the state of Michigan will forfeit their primary apportionment this year because they have too large a surplus on hand. Last year 485 districts, representing 53 counties, did not participate. The difference is due largely to the fact that in districts where only one teacher had been previously employed despite a large enrollment of pupils, the board has wisely secured two or more teachers in order to reduce the surplus so that the district should share in the apportionment. In this way school conditions have been improved by the change governing the apportionment.

EVELINE FARMS

Best Cherry Orchard in Northern Michigan—Receives Only Scientific Care.

I. B. McLenn of Boyne City entertained Professor L. R. Taft, W. H. White, Matt Duffy, S. C. Smith and E. W. Abbott in a launch party to the Eveline farms south of Ironton last Thursday afternoon. The Eveline farms contain about 350 acres.

On the Eveline farms there is a 20-acre cherry orchard only three old. These trees are expected to yield a crate of cherries to a tree, some of the trees being nine inches in circumference and ten feet across the top. The cherries were unaffected by frost this year and they promise to yield a crop that will pay interest on the valuation of about $500 per acre.

Of the fruit trees which comprise almost every kind grown, all are free from disease of all kinds. Each tree is receiving all the best care of scientific knowledge.

There are six cottages on the Eveline farms, each having a long lake frontage and overlooking the south arm of Pine Lake. The party also visited Holy Island which was purchased by Mr. McLenn and is being laid out for summer cottages.

B. Y. P. U. Elect Officers.

The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting of the Baptist Young People's Union held last Friday evening:

President—Mr. Frank Bears.
Vice-President—Bert Alcox.
Secretary—Miss Jennie Carey.
Treasurer—Miss Lavina Poole.
Organist—Miss Lila Martindale.

M. B. HOOKER'S NEW GARAGE

An Excellent Addition to the City and to the Community at Large.

Horses to be Kept in Basement—Autos and Carriages Occupy Ground Floor.

M. B. Hooker's garage and livery barn is now complete and ready for the use of the public. The building faces on Antrim Street and has two large front doors, one to be used for the entrance of cars and the other for cars leaving the building. It is constructed of cement blocks and has a cement floor covering a space of 100 feet by 50 feet. There is an exceptional light arrangement, 15 windows giving light by day and long strings of electric lights will perfectly illuminate it by night.

On the first floor will be found a self-measuring Wayne gasoline pump which is connected to a 500 gallon gasoline tank buried in the ground. The floor is sloped back to the center of the building where a drainage system is arranged to carry away all water used in washing cars and carriages.

In the basement where the horses of the livery barn are to be kept, there are accommodations for fifty horses, the stalls running on both sides of the basement. Each stall has a ventilation window and the floors are of solid cement. A large ventilation pipe will run from the center of the basement up through the roof. Water connections are arranged for a large drinking tank and to keep each of the stalls well cleaned. There is no question but that the new building is the best lighted and ventilated barn in northern Michigan.

With the two barns Mr. Hooker will be able to accommodate 100 horses. Among the livery horses which number twenty, ten of these are used both as drivers and saddle horses. A number of horses are expected to be added within a month, and the barn will continue to be open night and day.

Fire at Hotel Arlington.

Petokey was considerably excited at nine o'clock Saturday morning by the cry "The Arlington's Burning Up." The fire was easily extinguished by a fireman with an extinguisher upon their arrival.

Workmen were making improvements in the grill room. The torch used in melting the solder was left outside the building but so close to it that the outside wall became ignited, the flames worked their way between the siding and inner wall. The workmen held the flames under control until the arrival of the fire department. The damage will not exceed $25.00.

For Exchange.

A 40-acre fruit farm for a house and lot in the city. Will give you a bargain trade. J. Milo Eaton, 2213 Bakers Inn.

Mother's Pension Act.

The mother's pension act, so-called, enacted by the last legislature, regarding which much has been printed, is in reality not a pension at all. The act provides briefly that where a widow is unable to support her children and under the present law they would be sent to some state institution for neglected children, the court under the act may investigate the case and if it appears that the mother is a proper person to have the care of the children, the state will assist in their support by paying a certain amount for each child weekly to the mother, and the children remain at home.

Buy your meals at Millers and you'll have no cause for regret. Adv. 2a.

New Postoffice.

Postmaster General Burleson has ordered the establishment of a new postoffice of the fourth class at Lake Michigan, which is situated in Lake Michigan thirty-three miles from Charlevoix and eleven miles from St. James on Beaver Island. It will accommodate thirty families of the religious sect of the Israelite House of David, the headquarters of which are at Benton Harbor. High Island is visited infrequently by boats. The first postmistress there will be Miss Gladys Hill, who is the island's schoolteacher.

You will be satisfied if you get Moyer to hang your paper or do your painting or decorating. Leave orders at Central drug store, or call at 137 Bridge street. All work guaranteed.—Adv.

Colonel Todhunter of Missouri

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS

Copyright, 1911, by the Bobbe-Merrill Company.

Knowing the speaker better than he knew himself, Dick Canfield, husband of Colonel Todhunter and Colonel Strickland, were friends from boyhood. Friendship was something in the nature of a religion with Colonel Todhunter. In his simple creed he did not simply "like" his friends. He loved them with a trustful steadfastness that knew no limitations of loyalty or of potential sacrifice.

"Barrie" his wife and children, sub. Colonel Todhunter was wont to say. "A man's friends are all that's worth while in this world of ours. And his old friends, then that was young with him when he was making his way as the law-abiding well, sub. 'It ain't no price can be set on 'em, neither gold nor rubles nor jasper nor fawn-tussocks nor myrrh, nor the good book says, sub."

Colonel Todhunter had been vastly impatient for the return of the Hon. William J. Strickland. When the Gray Eagle rounded the bend in the river two miles below Nineveh and waked the Missouri echoes with the mellow tenderness of her famous lilt, tone whistle the colonel's face became splendidly illumined.

"There he comes, folks," he cried. "There comes old Bill Strickland, the man we're agoin' to nominate and elect governor of Missouri! All ready, now? Hip, hip, hooray!"

A mighty cheer rose from the crowd assembled on the Nineveh wharf, and snote afar the ears of Colonel Bill Strickland where he stood beside Captain Beverly Leigh on the Gray Eagle's upper deck. The candidate's eyes twinkled as they met those of the weatherbeaten riverman.

"That's old Thurs T. Todhunter's doing, Bev," he spoke. "I'll bet he's got nigh about all the male population of Nineveh rallyin' around him at that landing. The old rascal!"

Once more the cheering from Nineveh thrills rose as the Gray Eagle neared the landing, and the Hon. William J. Strickland waved his hand toward the waiting multitude. It increased in volume as he made his way downward until he stood placidly framed in the farther end of the lowered gangplank. It was a great moment for Nineveh.

Already the Nineveh brass band was playing "Hail to the Chief" with tremendous fervor. The gorgeously uniformed Nineveh Light Infantry

Colonel Todhunter and the Hon. William J. Strickland Moved Through the Applauding Hosts.

In company front at parade rest behind the band. All Nineveh, it seemed, was assembled back of them on the wharf bent and along the immediate river front. The ardent gathering split the air with shouts of high acclaim as the well-known figure of Colonel Bill Strickland crossed the steamer's gangplank. The next moment Colonel Thurs T. Todhunter, advancing, was seen to grasp his hand.

Each man accomplished a splendid cavalier sweep of his wide brimmed soft hat. Then they stood facing each other in a fine attitude of cordial dignity. They were prime types of two of the four strains of pioneer blood that are blended in the Missouri type itself. Colonel Todhunter coming of Kentucky stock and Colonel Strickland of Tennessee, Virginia and New England were the other contributors to the blend. The three southern states named are responsible for the emotional endowment that has made Missouri "apellibanders" long famous on the stump. The eastern states have supplied that cooler, steeper and more practical strain that constitutes Miss-ouri's balance wheel in character no adjustment.

Lining arms, Colonel Todhunter and the Hon. William J. Strickland moved through the applauding hosts to an open carriage.

"After you, sub," said Colonel Todhunter, ceremoniously waving his companion to the seat of honor. "And, sub, I beg to notify you that this is the beginning of your triumphal progress to the executive mansion at Jefferson City, sub."

Renewed cheering greeted this imposing announcement. The Hon. William J. Strickland took his place in the carriage. Colonel Todhunter followed him. The mayor of Nineveh, the editor of the Blade and other local celebrities occupied the remaining benches.

Captain Sam Birdsong of the Nineveh Light Infantry, a veteran of the Spanish war, now stationed on the side was a strait and field as a rascal. Ordinarily she was rather an awkward young Missourian, sub. but he became merely a man at the moment he donned his regimentals.

"Carry 'em up!" roared Captain Sam. "Carry 'em up! Shoulder 'em up! Right to war! 'Em right-march! 'Em right-march!"

Even as the thrilling commands were given and the Nineveh Light Infantry, in column of fours, came swinging on and took its station in front of the Strickland carriage the Nineveh brass band at the head of the column struck up "Stars and Stripes" and the first parade of the Strickland campaign for the governorship of Missouri was under way.

"Seems to me, Bill," said Colonel Todhunter as the carriage moved off, "that you came out for the nomination at exactly the right minute in that St. Louis announcement of yours. The old machine crowd's a-buckin' Steve Yancey to a fare you well, and the people's sick and tired of the whole outfit, sub. I miss my guess if it ain't a stampede in your direction."

Colonel Bill Strickland smiled doubtfully. "Our side seems to think that I'm the best man to make the race, Thurs," he spoke, "but you're way off if you think there ain't goin' to be a fight. It'll be hot and heavy straight down the line. Whoever wins will win after the toughest scramble you and me ever saw in Missouri politics, my friend."

"I ain't objectin' none to a fight," said Colonel Todhunter. "But this is the first time in the history of Missouri that the Democrats nominate their candidate for governor at the polls 'stead of in a nominatin' convention, and I believe they're agoin' to make sure of an honest man. It looks good to me, sub."

Pausing for just a moment he resumed, "Here's the way I size up the situation. Missouri Democrats know now that the old gang is crooked 'n a dog's hind leg, sub. They know you've been frozen out of the state committee chairmanship because that bunch ain't got no more use for you'n a boss thief's got for a square sheriff. You stand for a return to straight politics in these eyes. And now the voters don't have to leave the nominatin' business to a convention that's full of tricks 'n a cur dog's of fleas, sub. That's why I'm agoin' on your behalf 'nominatin'."

"Maybe so," replied the other. "But the machine's goin' to fight me all it knows how from start to finish. The fight'll begin right here in my own town. Old Eph Tucker, the richest man in Nineveh, is Stephen K. Yancey's personal representative in this neck of the woods, and old Eph Tucker hates me so hard it keeps him awake at nights."

"Well, sub," chuckled Colonel Todhunter, "if the old gang waits for Eph Tucker to spend any of his money in politics they'll wait a mighty long time, sub. He squeezes every dollar of his'n till the eagle screams and then he backs into his own pocket, and you know it."

Colonel Strickland laughed. Suddenly he held up one finger. "What's that?"

A sound of strident music, punctuated by terrific and hollow thumpings at rhythmic intervals, came from the little strip of Nineveh lying between them and the town hall.

The light of battle leaped into Colonel Todhunter's eyes. "I'll be eternally dhunamined," he cried, "if it ain't that there Nineveh bugle and drum corps that's been cavortin' 'round here at the head of the Stephen K. Yancey Campaign club! You look a-ber, Bill Strickland! If them fellows has had the impudence to turn out on parade when we're a-welcomin' you home to Nineveh I'll sheck our boys on to 'em as sure as my name's Thurs T. Todhunter, sub!"

Colonel Strickland was laughing out-right. "What did I tell you?" he said. "They haven't lost any time declarin' war, and somebody's payin' good money for it too!"

Colonel Todhunter leaped out of the carriage and spoke to the nearest Strickland partisan. "You run up under at the head of that band, Thurs," he said, "and tell Samson Meek to come back here a minute. I want to see him."

Samson Meek, leader of the Nineveh brass band, hurried back. He was so buttoned up and padded in his gorgeous drum major's uniform, topped off with a gleaming fur shako, that the sweat poured down his back and honest Missouri face like rain.

"Samson," spoke Colonel Todhunter earnestly, "if we run across that Stephen K. Yancey bugle and drum corps, I want you to drown 'em out and keep 'em drowned out, sub. Do you understand?"

Samson Meek brought his baton to a present. "Colonel Todhunter, ee, another 'em, sub. I just been waitin' for the chance."

"Then you go back and tell your norn tooters what's expected of 'em, sub," commanded Colonel Todhunter. "Specially that little fat fellow with the horn bigger'n his's. Tell him to blow himself inside out. This here Strickland parade ain't a-goin' to be interrupted by no Steve Yancey and Eph Tucker foolishness as long as I'm in charge of the welcome ceremonies, sub!"

Then he turned to Colonel Bill Strickland. "That settles it, sub," he shorted. "I'll be shot full of holes if I don't take the stump for you myself, Bill Strickland, if they're starlin' the fight right in your own town, sub. The first minute you come home, sub. I'll make imperial Mizzouriah howl for William J. Strickland, too, sub, hang my picture if I don't!"

In full view of the parading crowd Colonel Bill Strickland grasped Colonel Todhunter's hand. "You old war horse!" he cried. "I'd rather have you stumpin' Missouri for me than all the state committee spellbinders that ever breathed the breath of life! Bully for you, Thurs! We'll fight 'em to the last ditch!" Great was the cheering at this incident.

But the Strickland parade did not encounter the Nineveh bugle and drum corps and the Stephen K. Yancey Campaign club at this juncture.

The encounter came later. It came at that tremendous moment when Colonel Thurst T. Todhunter, majestic on the town hall stage, was just reaching the fervid peroration of a speech that was to close with the inspiring mention of the name of the Honorable William J. Strickland as Missouri Democracy's sure choice for governor.

It was a premeditated blow in the glory of the Todhunter brand of oratory, the cherished pride of Colonel Thurst T. Todhunter's ardent soul.

Entering the town hall and defiantly marching up the main corridor to the wide double doors that gave a view of the Strickland meeting, the Nineveh bugle and drum corps, heading the Stephen K. Yancey Campaign club, awoke the resounding echoes.

Never, it would seem, had earth heard such clamor of trumpet and tam-tam.

It crashed into and through the town hall assembly room. It rose to the roof and came thundering back into the aisles. It smote the ears as with catenaceous bolts of sound. It stilled the eloquence of Colonel Thurst T. Todhunter as if that mighty speaker were an infant lifting voice against the voice of elemental chaos.

And Colonel Todhunter paused, crestfallen.

Then the lust of righteous battle flamed from his indignation eyes. He waved his right hand with a Jewish gesture. "Order 'em away, Samson!" he shouted. "You and Sam Birdsong! I ain't done yet!"

And the gallant Samson Meek rose to the occasion. With a mighty wave of his baton he rallied his bandmen in close order behind him. Captain Sam Birdsong, no less dependable, formed the Nineveh Light Infantry in line behind the band. There was a magnificent flourish of Samson Meek's silver knubbed rod of office, a quick command from Captain Sam Birdsong, and then—

The Nineveh brass band and the Nineveh Light Infantry deployed into the corridor and charged upon the enemy.

It was an assault sonorous and irresistible. Its slogan was "Hail to the Chief." This gave the big horns an almost unearthly opportunity. The "little fat fellow with the horn bigger'n his'n" seemed resolved to obey Colonel Todhunter's injunction and "blow himself inside out." His fellows followed his example. The resultant cyclone of wind clamor welled out the Nineveh bugle and drum corps as if it had not been. Triumph shone on the face of Drum Major Samson Meek, triumphantly waving his glittering baton.

For an ominous cry rose from his front. "Rush 'em, boys! Make a rough house!"

WOULD CHANGE WORK OF SCHOOLS

Superintendent of Public Instruction Presents a New Plan.

Which Would Change High School to First Present Needs—Would Have Less Books.

After a study of the present day high school, Superintendent of Public Instruction Luther L. Wright has devised the following code of fourteen articles for the readjustment of secondary schools:

First. Course of study should be broadened, one route to point towards the university for the few and another towards industrial life for the many. In the college preparatory courses, most of the work now offered beyond the fifteen units should be eliminated; foreign language offered only for those preparing for college, and that simply because the college requires it. It ought to be possible in Michigan to get an education in the English language.

Second. Have fewer academic subjects, fewer sciences, but take these for a longer time.

Third. Do away with the idea that a student, especially a girl, must take subjects for which the student has no aptitude.

Fourth. Provide industrial training for everybody, every day, every boy in the shop and every girl in the kitchen; at the least until a pupil is certain that he is to follow the route toward the college, this training to head straight toward a life work.

Fifth. Special trade or continuation schools for those who want a trade, the trades to be taught by a master workman and not by a school teacher.

Sixth. Break the lock-step for graduation. The high school is run on the plan that everybody may or will graduate. For the student who can remain only a year or so the present high school has little to offer. Give any one who is willing to work an opportunity to himself for a livelihood in the shortest time possible. This means special classes, graduation in less than four years. It means, perhaps, classes started at irregular times. It means teachers who appreciate the situation.

Seventh. Lengthen school day and week and year. High school students are capable of much work. The long vacation and the short school day tend to create a habit of laziness. The great asset that a young man may bring to his life job is the habit of work. The Russell Sage Foundation has recently published a Comparative Study of Public School Systems in the forty-eight states. On page 11 you will find this sentence: "As a nation the United States has a shorter school day, a shorter school week, and a shorter school year than any other highly civilized country in the world." But there must be a diversity of work, work for the hand and the mind, so that work will be less like drudgery than now. We must hustle more and hurry less.

Eighth. Fewer books, more laboratories, shops and study of things, and greater emphasis on the constructive side.

Ninth. Less written work, more oral, more public speaking; much less of written work intended for the waste basket.

Tenth. Study of modern English classics instead of ancient English classics.

Eleventh. Run the school primarily for the great majority who can never go to college. Give the others their fair share of attention, but no more, as now, let their interest dominate the school.

Twelfth. Bear in mind that different types of education are required for boys and for girls.

Thirteenth. Make the school to fit the community and the course of study to fit the pupil.

Fourteenth. Emphasize the idea that the school is a work shop and that there is no substitute work.

BRINTNALL OF EAST JORDAN

Selected as Secretary of Charlevoix County Agricultural Society.

HAS FILLED OFFICE BEFORE

Educational Exhibit and Fine Arts Building Proposition Discussed.

Secretary R. A. Brintnall Urges Citizens of County to Give Financial Support—List of Contributions Already Pledged.

The executive committee of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society met at East Jordan, June 14, and considered several important matters relative to the coming fair to be held September 9-12.

A letter of resignation from Secretary W. P. Squier, who has accepted an important railroad position at Illinois, Missouri, was accepted and R. A. Brintnall, of East Jordan, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

This appointment will undoubtedly meet with general approval, as Mr. Brintnall has already gained considerable experience in the work, having creditably served the fair association in the same capacity during the year 1907-1908.

The educational exhibit and fine arts building proposition, on which considerable expense and effort has already been expended by the fair association, the teachers of the public schools, school officers, and others, interested in developing the fair as an important factor to advance the educational interests of our county, was thoroughly discussed, and secretary Brintnall was instructed to make a public statement asking immediate co-operation.

The committee expects to meet again in a few days at the call of its chairman, E. B. Ward of Charlevoix.

To the Public: This means YOU. The executive committee of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society has directed me to address you with reference to the Educational Exhibit and Fine Arts Building for the coming Charlevoix County Fair.

My past experience as secretary of your fair association has convinced me that it has ever been the policy of the fair management to return to the public, as far as possible, in the shape of premiums, free attractions, and improvements, every cent that is contributed to its support from whatever source received. Therefore, when the growing need of a better educational exhibit in keeping with the progress of our schools, and a suitable building to properly protect and display such an exhibit, became so urgent as to demand immediate attention, it was not surprising that so far as finances were concerned, the fair management was obliged to regard the proposition as somewhat of an extraordinary nature, and to seek the support of the entire county, outside of the regular channels.

With their characteristic vigor the board of directors decided to act. Plans for a suitable building, and a great educational exhibit were formulated, and the matter was taken up in a very aggressive and comprehensive manner with the schools and the school district officers of our county. The list of premiums to educational work was greatly enlarged and special premiums of exceptional value will be offered. In short, the successful completion of our plans cannot fail to repay the people of our county, in the direction of educational development, many times the small initial cost which the various school districts, organizations, and public spirited citizens are asked to contribute.

Now dear reader, I have reached the point. The schools of our county have responded nobly in the preparation of exhibits, also in some cases, as to money pledged, but we have not as yet received the universal co-operation in the matter of financial support, that the complete success of the plan demands and deserves.

Cash and pledges have been received as follows: School District No. 4, City of

East Jordan	$100.00
School District No. 2, Frl. Eveline Township	10.00
School District No. 9, Boyne Valley Township	10.00
School District No. 1, Chandler Township	10.00
School District No. 4, Hudson Township	10.00
School District No. 3, Marion Township	8.10
School District No. 2, Norwood Township	9.45
School District No. 1, Hayes Township	6.00
School District No. 4, City of East Jordan, 5th grade	8.00
School District No. 2, Clanton Township	7.00
School District No. 1, Eveline Township	6.00
School District No. 1, Peaine Township	5.00
School District No. 4, Melrose Township	10.00
School District No. 1, Eveline Township	10.00
School District No. 3, Eveline Township	5.00
School District No. 5, Eveline Township	2.00
School District No. 4, Hayes Township	10.35
School District No. 9, Marion Township	10.00
Received from other sources or districts not listed	31.30

Now, if every school district in our county, who have not already done so, would on or before (preferable before) their next annual school meeting, appropriate even ten dollars each, (a very trivial amount compared with the benefits that must result), the assistance will be greatly appreciated by your fair association officers and every one interested in its proper development as an educational factor.

Now, dear reader, this matter is in every sense of the word up to you. Get busy, use your utmost influence at once to bring about favorable action on the part of your grange, the school officers and voters of your school district, and every organization, or individual, that may be induced to do something towards promoting this important work.

And remember, begin at once, and when a contribution is promised see that your fair secretary, at East Jordan, is notified at once.

Act now, influence and support is needed. Respectfully,

R. A. Brintnall, Secretary Charlevoix Co. Fair.

VISITED FRIENDS HERE

Ensign Harold Perry Parmelee and Wife at Breezy Point Cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee, who have been visiting at Breezy Point cottage, left Tuesday for San Diego, California.

Ensign Harold Perry Parmelee, U. S. Navy, was married June 7th, 1913, to Miss Leta Mae Henry, only daughter of Congressman Robert Lee Henry, chairman rules committee at Washington. The young couple came direct from Washington to Breezy Point, to visit his Charlevoix relatives.

The bride's picture was in the newspapers of more than fifty large cities. The wedding was a social event, many representatives, U. S. senators and other distinguished guests being present, including the secretary of state and secretary of the navy. She is a charming woman and Harold is a fortunate man to win such a prize.

Mr. and Mrs. Parmelee has the best wishes of their many Charlevoix friends.

SAVED CHILD FROM BURNING HOUSE

Albert Arnold, Though Burned, Went Back to Help Others.

Overcome Second Time, Fell from Second Story Window—Both Are Badly Burned.

The following clipping from a Gloucester, Massachusetts daily was received by the Courier, and will be of great interest to friends of the parties mentioned:

"Fire caused by the explosion of a kerosene lamp in the kitchen was the cause of two persons being severely burned.

"The tenants were families from Michigan, the male members being in the mill-netting industry. Alphonse Deon, wife and brother resided upstairs and Albert Arnold and family and Jesse Feuness and family were the two ground floor tenants. The fire started downstairs in the kitchen.

"Two men who happened to be near the house at the time saw the fire through the window and gave the alarm. In the meantime Arnold rushed into the chamber of the sleeping three year old boy of Feuness and brought him out of danger. A woman was outside of the house near the window to receive the child in her arms, but Arnold did not know this and blinded and choked by smoke, groped his way along to the kitchen where the blaze was in progress.

"Knowing to turn back meant death for the child and himself and feeling his senses going, he took the one life chance for both and dashed through the flames. Both he and the child were severely burned, but his daring saved a little life as well as his own.

"Arnold was in an unconscious condition and a physician gave immediate aid. He soon revived and almost immediately went back into the house in search of people on the second floor. Shortly afterward he was seen hanging out full length from a second story window, and called to his friends whom he thought was in the burning building. He did what he considered his duties till the last when he dropped out of the window to the ground, falling in an unconscious heap and suffering with pain.

"Vassar Feuness, the child of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Feuness, was badly burned about the face, both hands, legs and hips and the hair all burnt off his head. Arnold was burned on the face, neck and right hand, and some of his hair burned off his head.

The victims of the fire were quite comfortable at last reports, and both will most probably get out of danger. Vassar, the little son, was taken to the home of his aunt, Mrs. Herman Tysler. Little Vassar is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Shores of this city.

BAD FOREST FIRE

Inhabitants of Epsilon, Emmet County, Fight to Save Their Town.

After 24 hours fight against forest fires which threatened from all sides, the little village of Epsilon, dear Petoskey, was saved from total destruction last Friday. The blaze started Thursday morning from a wood sawing engine, the porch of the Grant Blanchard residence being the first thing to burn. The wind saved the house proper, but carried the flames into the woods and several miles of forest was burned. Thousands of dollars worth of property was lost.

The entire community banded into volunteer fighting companies, the women assisting the men, in an attempt to turn the direction of the fire.

Frosts Damage Peach Crop.

The light frosts and cold winds that prevailed the first of last week have put a serious crimp in the hopes of growers in the northern section of the state. In many places the leaves have curled on the trees and the fruit has dropped off at a rate that indicates an extremely short crop. All other fruits were not affected by the cold.

WILL INSPECT ALL APPLES

Bureau's Label to be Placed on Each Barrel and Box of Fruit.

Fifty Thousand Edition of Western Michigan Magazine to be Published.

The Executive Committee of the Western Michigan Development bureau has adopted a program which calls for the using of the moral energy of the bureau in behalf of the establishment of cold storage plants, canning factories, evaporating works and cider mills in western Michigan, the idea being that the establishment of such enterprises will help in the marketing of the immense of fruit crops which are being produced.

The committee decided to inaugurate its inspection system for apples the coming year and will engage inspectors who will examine the fruit and place the bureau's label upon such barrels and boxes as come up to the standard.

It is proposed to introduce moving pictures as one of the features of the lecture work being carried on by the bureau in its home missionary and foreign missionary endeavors. Films of local scenes illustrating general farming, fruit growing and rearing are to be prepared the coming season and used in the fall and winter.

It was decided to issue a new edition of the illustrated magazine, "Western Michigan, Fruit with Flavor." This edition to consist of 30,000 copies and to be handsomely illustrated with up-to-date western Michigan orchard and farm scenes. The statistical information will also be brought up-to-date.

It is the consensus of opinion of the members of the executive committee that much good can be done for western Michigan by the holding of a number of fruit and farm exhibits in the more important commercial centers in southern Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and plans will undoubtedly be worked out whereby such exhibits can be made a success in the work of advertising the western Michigan country both as a region in which to settle and as a region which produces products that are worth buying.

HAD NARROW ESCAPE

Gasoline Engine in Boat Explodes—Occupants Thrown into the Water.

Three women and five men had a narrow escape from death last week while crossing the lake near Ellsworth. The party were returning from a picnic across the lake and for some reason the engine stopped. They were near shore at the time, but an off breeze carried them out into the lake about a half mile, while they were tinkering with the engine.

Persons who were watching them from the shore saw the eight passengers suddenly jump to their feet. A flash and a cloud of smoke followed. In an instant the launch was in flames and the picnickers were in the chilly water struggling to dodge the blazing gasoline which scattered in all directions.

The men succeeded in keeping the women afloat with the help of life preservers until help came.

The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. James T. Jumpy, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Henry LaFayette, William Smith and Henry Hostler.

NOT INCOMPATIBLE

Attorney General Makes Important Ruling—Letter From Superintendent L. L. Wright.

School Commissioner Ray F. Jennings has just received the following letter from L. L. Wright, state superintendent of public instruction, which furnishes new light on a question which has caused a good deal of controversy throughout the state, the letter being self explanatory:

Lausling, May 24, 1913.

To the County Commissioners of Schools: As you know, the Attorney General has ruled to the last few years that the offices of members of the township board and members of a district are incompatible. The new Attorney General has reversed this ruling. The law giving to the township board the power to remove district officers has been repealed, and in any event Mr. Fellows thinks that it was going to some length to declare incompatibility and to hold that the office became vacant. He does hold, however, that the offices of township treasurer and district treasurer are incompatible. This incompatibility question has been discussed so much of late years that I think it wish to inform you of the Attorney General's ruling in order, that the matter may be clearly understood. We have sent out a great many letters from this Department giving the ruling as made by the former Attorney General, but it will be necessary for us to make a different statement hereafter.

Yours very truly,
L. L. Wright.

Visits Old Home.

Jacob VanDusen, one of the pioneer settlers of Charlevoix county, left Saturday for an extended visit at Ellensburg, Clinton county, N. Y. From there he will go to Richmond, Vermont, where he will visit a daughter and other relatives. This is the second time Mr. VanDusen has visited his old home since leaving. He first came to Charlevoix county in 1863 and settled on a farm at Norwood. Mr. VanDusen stated that at the time he came to Charlevoix, there were but two stores here, and but a few houses. He helped log the road now running to Norwood, which at that time was only a trail running through the woods. He expects to return to Charlevoix late in the fall.

REMAIN IN SCHOOL

Passing the Eighth Grade Will no Longer Exempt Pupils—Approved by Governor Ferris.

Every child to the state of Michigan under the age of sixteen must be in school or regularly employed, without regard to whether or not he or she has passed the eighth grade, according to an amendment of the compulsory school law, which Governor W. N. Ferris has recently approved. Heretofore those children who have passed the eighth grade satisfactorily were exempt from the provisions of the law regardless of their age.

Beginning with August 15, any child claiming exemption on account of having passed the eighth grade must secure a work permit from the county commissioner of schools or from the graded school superintendent and must be regularly employed at some lawful work if physically able to do so. This law, it is expected, will have a decided tendency to keep boys and girls in school for a longer period and an increase in high school enrollment is assured.

VERDICT OF $4,086

Electric Light Company of East Jordan Wins Damage Suit—Hard Fought Legal Battle.

On Wednesday evening of last week the jury in the damage case of the East Jordan Electric Light & Power Co. vs. East Jordan Coöperative Co. brought in a verdict for the plaintiffs in the sum of $4,086, besides canceling a counter claim of over $1,900.

It was one of the hardest fought legal battles ever tried in the county, having occupied eight days in its trial.

The suit was brought about by the Power Company being unable to fulfil a contract entered into with the Coöperative Company to furnish power to operate their plant.

Pe-to-se-ga Sunk.

The little bay steamer Pe-to-se-ga, recently taken to Traverse City from Little Traverse Bay, sank while approaching her dock at that city Sunday. She hit a pile and tore a hole below her water line, sinking in a short time.

She was formerly called the Topinabee and was run in the inland route from Oden to Cheboygan. She was built in 1899. She had been doing a passenger and freight business between Traverse City and Traverse Bay points.

BIDS FOR ROADS HARD TO GET

None Presented to County Road Commissioner for Proposed Roads.

NEW MACHINERY PURCHASED

Tabulated Cost of Surveying and Road Staking Already Done.

Two Stretches of Road to be Built of Gravel—H. L. Winters Chosen for Road Engineer—Good Work Being Done.

Last Wednesday at the meeting of the County Road Commissioners it was found that not a single bid had been submitted for the building of the nine miles of county road to be built this summer, and under these conditions there is nothing left for the board to do but to go ahead and build the roads themselves. This being the case they carried out arrangements to get ready for the work at the earliest possible moment.

Two of the stretches of road to be built are to be of gravel which must be screened, necessitating the buying of screens. One of these was purchased outright and the other leased on terms that when the rental is paid for three years it becomes the property of the county. A Road King grader was purchased for use on the Charlevoix section; a National Reversible Road Machine for the Boyne City end, and a No. 1 Case Perfection Road Grader with engine steering hitch for work at the East Jordan end. Grading plows were also purchased, but the wheel and drag scrapers will be purchased of local dealers, as they can give as good terms as can be obtained outside.

For power it is understood that it is the intention of the commissioners to lease traction engines, and for rolling, the steam rollers owned by the cities of East Jordan and Charlevoix will be secured.

The preliminary work of surveying and grade-staking the roads already done was found to have cost the following: The Boyne City section, complete, $218.27; East Jordan section, complete, $153.20; and the Charlevoix section, incomplete (not yet staked), $28.19. Henry L. Winters, of East Jordan, who did the engineering at that end of the section, was chosen as county road engineer by the board.

The road commissioners propose to see that the roads are built in the best possible manner, and that the tax payers receive full value for every dollar of road funds expended under their administration.

Commissioner Hammond informs the Courier that the first work he will undertake will be to repair the culvert near the Paddock farm. Here the road bed will be raised and ditches constructed to hold the dirt.

He will then build a new concrete culvert near the Straw farm on the East Jordan road, and complete the staking of the proposed road bed. He will make an effort to complete this work while waiting for the new machinery to arrive.

INSTALLS GAS PLANT

W. I. Rachow First in City to Use New System—Very Convenient.

A new convenience in the way of an individual gas plant is now on the market and people living in the country or smaller cities can now avail themselves of the comforts of using gas for cooking and lighting the same as though they lived where the community had natural or city gas.

The gas is supplied in bottles much the same as a press-o-lite tank on an automobile. The plant consists of a cabinet wherein is contained the expansion tank, from where the gas flows through a regulator to the burners at a uniform pressure. When the bottles are empty they are removed and a new bottle connected.

The first of such a system in Charlevoix was installed last week in the residence of W. J. Rachow, on Park Avenue. It is claimed that the use of this gas is economical, practical, safe and very desirable.

DOWNWARD COURSE

Fast Being Realized by Charlevoix People.

A little backache at first. Daily increasing till the back is lame and weak. Urinary disorders may quickly follow.

Dropsy and often Bright's disease.

This frequently is the downward course of kidney ills.

Don't take this course. Charlevoix residents should profit by the following experience.

Mrs. Ophelia Davey, Ellsworth, Michigan, says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for some time. There was pain in the small of my back and twinges when stooping or lifting. My back ached at night and was lame in the morning. I tried easily, was languid and nervous and had headaches. The kidney secretions were unnatural. I finally took Doan's Kidney Pills and they helped me at once."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.—Advertisement.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Sent for list of testimonials. Address: F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by all druggists. Take Hall's Catarrh Cure for constipation.

Wool Wanted.

We will pay the highest market price for wool. Chatterton & Son, Ferry & Co. Seed House.—Adv. 22tf

TRAIN FOR LIFE

Superintendent Luther L. Wright contends that Girls be Fitted for Their Work.

The high schools do not properly prepare girls for their work in life is the contention of Superintendent of Public Instruction Luther L. Wright. He claims that girls and boys differ in their natures and destiny and it is futile to treat them alike in school. He says:

"We cannot always tell what line of education is best for a boy because we do not always know what him for one line and he may choose another. But we need have no such uncertainty about girls. The great business of their lives is to be a housekeeper, a home maker and the mother of children. It is well enough to say that mothers ought to prepare their daughters, but they do not in fact. Not always do mothers even have a knowledge of the underlying sciences, however proficient they may be in household arts."

"Even in Michigan not enough attention is given to the education that will fit a girl for her work. Forty-five cities out of 100 in Michigan, or practically 50 per cent, have instruction in domestic science. Seven incorporated villages out of 33, or only two per cent, report instruction given in domestic science; but only 24 of those 55 cities and the seven villages give work in household arts four days in the week."

"There are 10,377 girls in Michigan studying Latin, French or German while 9,541 girls study algebra or geometry. The number of girls studying household arts four days in the week is 3,258. One-third as many girls are studying the household arts as are studying Latin, French or German; and a little more than one-third as many girls are studying household arts as are studying algebra or geometry."

If I had my way I would have every girl in every high school every day study the science and art of housekeeping and home making."

CHAPTER IV.

Lottie-May Doggett Weaves a Web.
Lottie-May Doggett, her dark and eager face alight with excitement, had attended the political meeting which followed the Strickland parade. Nearly all Nueveh indeed, ordinarily so quiet, was in public evidence this night, grateful for a little diversion.

The girl was a witness therefore to the dire interruption of Colonel Todhunter's speech and had also seen the clash of the rival factions, headed by Tom Strickland and Stam Tucker. Her eyes shone with expectancy of a personal encounter between the two young men.

"Lord, I'd like to see 'em clinch!" she exclaimed, pushing a bit forward as she spoke. "They'd make a good fight, too, seein' us how there ain't been no love lost between 'em for some time. I bet they'll get at it!"

Her companion, a girl who eyed Lottie-May that partial acceptance by Nueveh's good families which was due to her grandfather's honorable Confederate record, laughed a bit significantly. "It won't be your fault if they don't fight some day, Lottie-May Doggett," she charged. "I hear you've been settin' your cup at both of 'em in a mighty dangerous way."

"I ain't been doin' nothin' of the sort!" indignantly denied Lottie-May, resentment in her face. "It ain't my fault if Stam Tucker sets up to me, is it? And I reckon Tom Strickland's got the same right, ain't he? You better mind your own business and let my affairs alone."

"Land alive! What a spit cat about nothin'!" protested the other. "But Tom Strickland better leave Stam Tucker alone. My brother says Stam always carries a pistol and is a dangerous man when his blood's up."

Lottie-May's eyes flashed instant disdain. "I reckon Tom Strickland can take care of himself," she retorted hotly. "I wouldn't be afear'd for him in a difficulty with Stam Tucker."

Her companion laughed triumphantly. "I caught you that time, Lottie-May," she cried. "I just wanted to see which you liked the best, Stam or Tom. And it's Tom, that's who it is!"

"You think you're smart, don't you?" countered Lottie-May, but blushing angrily. "Well, you ain't. Neither one of 'em is makin' me lay awake of nights. I can tell you."

"It'll be Tom does it. If anybody does," calmly returned the other. "But they ain't u-goin' to elch this time, at any rate. Pete Fanshaw's just called 'em down and put a stop to their foolishness."

Lottie-May was still fuming with resentment of this open bantering concerning Tom Strickland and Stam Tucker when she started homeward. Not at all unwilling to accept the secret wooing of either, she intuitively shrank from the open coupling of their names with hers. The shadow of her mother's shame oppressed her, and it was only in moments of sudden anger or other excitement that she surrendered to a mood of reckless defiance of her dark inheritance.

Even now, however, it gave Lottie-May a thrill of valiant triumph to remember that Stam Tucker was awaiting her somewhat further along her lonely homeward way through the night and that, he would accompany her as near to her suspicious old grandfather's house as she dared permit. But Tom Strickland himself intervened before her meeting with Stam Tucker this night. He, too, was homeward bound, encountering the girl at a secluded crossing of their respective roads. Lottie-May's heart gave a great leap as she recognized him in the darkness. A sudden impulse of passionate endearment possessed her soul.

"Goodness me, Tom Strickland!" she cried. "You skeered me 'most to death! I took you for one of them Black Bottom men from the trappin' camp." Emphasizing her claim of panic, she stood very close to Tom. A loose strand of her hair blew against his face. Her dark eyes were velvety with uncontrolled temptation, her voice vibrant with appeal.

"You oughtn't to be going home by yourself at this time of night, Lottie-May," said Tom. "It ain't safe—for as young and—as as pretty a girl as you are." His voice shook just a little.

Lottie-May laughed. "There, Tom, you've actually paid me a compliment!" she exclaimed, a perilous exultation curving her red lips. "It's the first one, too. Maybe you ain't so hard hearted in the nighttime as you are in the daytime, Tom?"

There was the frankest wooing in the girl's manner. She moved until her softly rounded young shoulder touched Tom's arm.

"I never saw the day I was afraid to tell you how pretty you are," he said. "But that's just the trouble right now. I don't like to see you goin' home alone so late at night."

Lottie-May Doggett felt a sudden glow of love for Tom thrill her. At the same instant, though remembering, she recklessly ignored the fact that Stam Tucker was waiting for her farther along the way.

"Maybe you better come home with me, then, Tom," she said softly. Tom Strickland laughed.

"That's what I'm going to do, Lottie-May," he responded. "I'd never forgive myself if anything happened to you with me knowing you had to go home alone. You—you're sure you're willing for me to come with you?"

The girl's eyes were liquid soft. "Willin'?" she repeated. "You know I'm willin'—and more than willin', Tom. I just asked you—and I ain't never goin' to forget this night as long as I live!"

Azain Tom Strickland laughed. "You will have me making love to you first thing you know?" he said. "You'd better be careful, Lottie-May, if you ain't willin'!"

"I dare you to, Tom!" the girl replied in a low voice. "I dare you to! And so real, man ever took such a dare from a girl!"

They were moving side by side along the road. The electric carriages seemed that of some wild and beautiful young animal of the woods. Tom Strickland bent toward her, passing his arm about her soft little waist.

"Kiss me!" whispered Lottie-May in reply. "Kiss me, Tom. I love you so!" Even as she spoke Tom Strickland had taken her in his arms, pressing his lips to hers.

And at that moment Stam Tucker, waiting to meet Lottie-May by appointment, stepped out of the shadow at the road's edge. His face was black with jealous rage.

Lottie-May Doggett gave a little cry of dismay. "Why, Stam!" she cried, releasing herself from Tom's arms and

"Let him alone, Lottie-May," said Tom Strickland. "He won't shoot."

essaying to laugh. "You are waiting for me after all, ain't you? I was afear'd you'd gone home, so Tom Strickland here was goin' with me instead."

An ugly sneer was on Stam Tucker's face. "So I see," he replied, glancing venomously from one to the other. "And you seem to be having a good time, both of you."

"Oh, shucks, now, Stam, it's nothin' but foolin' that's all," cried the girl, a note of pleading in her voice. "I was tushin' Tom for bein' bashful, and I dared him to kiss me, and he would not take a dare—and that's the whole truth."

"I reckon it's all the truth you intend to tell," replied Stam. "But I'll tell you what it looks like to me. It looks like—"

"Stop right there, Stam!" interrupted Tom Strickland. "If you've seen anything you don't like I'm the responsible party. Say whatever you've got to say to me, not to a woman!"

"I don't ask anything better, Tom Strickland," instantly retorted Stam, turning swiftly from the girl. "And I won't mince any words saying it either. You're a—"

"Stam!" cried Lottie-May, running to the speaker and placing a restraining hand on his that had suddenly been thrust back to his hip pocket. "You shan't do it! You ain't doin' it, Stam! I'd ruin me in Nueveh forever and ever!"

"Let him alone, Lottie-May," said Tom Strickland. "He won't shoot. Just you stand aside and let him crack his whip."

Stam Tucker made a movement to throw Lottie-May off, but the girl clung to him desperately. Tom Strickland's eyes hardened as they watched Stam Tucker with an ominous alertness.

A farm horse drawing a ramshackle spring wagon emerged into view around a bend in the road some distance away and came lumbering along toward the three.

"Good Lord, it's granddaddy!" cried Lottie-May Doggett. "For my sake, please—please, Stam, you and Tom both—don't let him see there's been any trouble!"

Old Rafe Doggett, white haired and stern of visage, scowled suspiciously at Lottie-May and her companions as he brought his horse to a halt.

"Where in the world have you been (ill this hour of the night, Lottie-May?" he asked. "I was on my way to town after you. What have you been doin', girl?"

Lottie-May stood shamefaced. "Why, granddaddy," she replied nervously, "I just stayed to the political meetin', that's all. There was to be a brass band there and speakin' and all that, and I just couldn't come away till it was over."

The old man kept his accusing eyes on the girl's face for a moment. Then he turned and looked searchingly first at Stam Tucker and then at Tom Strickland. Tom felt a sudden and overwhelming sense of shame and self reproach and pity for the good old man whose dread, barred eyes were so somberly bent on him.

There was a moment of silence. "Well, seein' all there was to see," old Rafe Doggett resumed then, "what did you do after that, girl? How comes it that you're here on the road with Stam Tucker, facin' Tom Strickland like there'd been a quarrel? Tell me the truth!"

Lottie-May Doggett flashed a quick appeal of her eyes at Tom Strickland. It was plainly a mute and desperate entreaty for his forbearance with what ever she was about to say.

Then, "Why, granddaddy," she made answer, "Stam offered to escort me home, and we met Tom on the way, and we just all three stopped to talk for a minute—that's all. Quarrellin' Stam and Tom wasn't thinkin' of such a thing; that's the truth. I cross my heart, please, sir!"

The girl's voice trembled with fear of her grim old grandfather, to whom her mother's memory remained but as meaning a lifelong disgrace and humiliation. The old man seemed not entirely satisfied with her explanation. He sat silent, still studying the group confronting him. Then he sighed.

"Well, Lottie-May," he spoke at last. "Since Stam wants to escort you home he can still do it, I reckon. But you both better come along with me in the wagon. There ain't no sense in your walkin' now."

Lottie-May's frightened eyes were pleading with Stam and Tom to abide by her story and comply with her grandfather's wishes.

"All right, Mr. Doggett," spoke Stam finally. "I'll be specially glad for Lottie-May to ride. I reckon she's pretty tired by now, so I'll just see her home that way, along with you."

Tom Strickland stood silent as Lottie-May was lifted into the wagon by Stam Tucker, who mounted to the seat beside her. Old Rafe Doggett clucked to his horse.

"Good night, Tom!" cried the girl. "Good night, Lottie-May!" replied Tom. "Good night, Mr. Doggett!"

The next moment they were gone. And Tom Strickland, shamed to the soul at thought of what he had seen in old Rafe Doggett's worn and wasted face, made his own way homeward.

The Hon. William J. Strickland and Colonel Todhunter were parting company for a few days after a final conference concerning preliminary campaign plans.

"I'll have to get back to St. Louis and see how things are starting off at my headquarters there," said Colonel Strickland. "Then it'll be necessary to take a run across the state and establish headquarters in Kansas City, right under Steve Yancey's nose. I'll want you to make a few speeches for me in St. Louis about next week, Thurs, old fellow. And don't forget—I'm going to hold you to your promise to stump the state for me."

"I ain't forgettin'," responded Colonel Todhunter. "I'm cocked and primed for a campaign that'll bring every old time Democrat in Mizzoarah out of the brush and set 'em to schoolin' things up for you to beat the band, sah. The abhorrable dollar ain't the only thing that talks in this here state yet—not by a jugful—and I'm a-goin' to prove it, Bill!"

"It's what we've got to beat, though," commented the candidate. "Things ain't like they used to be in Missouri politics, my friend."

"That's why we got so many of them professional politicians and so few real statesmen nowadays," replied the other. "But, all the same, the people of Mizzoarah's honest, if the politicians ain't, and this here new primary-law's a-goin' to give 'em their best chance to name their own choice for governor, sah."

"It will, if there's no crooked work at the polls," said Colonel Strickland. "I'm afraid of the elites for that reason."

Colonel Todhunter nodded his head emphatically. "I'll just be jiz whittled if all the corruption in American politics don't seem to come from the big towns, sah. It looks like it's plumb natural for cities to be sinful. It's been that way ever since Sodom and Gomorrah, sah. Do you reckon the Old Minister up above couldn't ha' found ten honest men among the shepherds watchin' their flocks and the husband-men tillin' their fields in the country? He couldn't ha' missed findin' 'em 'less'n he'd struck a bunch of 'em like old Eph Tucker here in Nueveh, sah!"

Then, after a reflective pause: "The trouble with old Eph Tucker, sah, is that he's got so he can't see anything but money. I ain't talkin' against money in his rightful proportion to the rest of life. I like to have it as well as the next man, and sometimes I need it mighty bad, too, but I'll be struck limber-jawed if it ain't plumb foolish to plug up your eyes with it, sah. It don't cost a cent to see the beauty and goodness of this here world, sah, not a cent, and if you miss seein' it, you miss seein' the whole show. That's too big a price to pay for the privilege of lookin' at a dollar instead, sah."

The Hon. William J. Strickland contemplated Colonel Todhunter with a smile on his grim lips.

"Thurs," he said. "I don't know any thing sounder than your faith in the good of life and your enthusiasm for livin' it on that basis!"

SUCCESS

— Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.

— In business most often fail even to get a start, because they lack money.

— The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.

— You can open a savings account in this bank with $1.00 or more. We invite you to do so.

HOMEWARD BOUND

Interesting Letter From Mrs. O. A. Dorrance on Eastern Trip.

The following letter from Mrs. O. A. Dorrance will be of interest to her many Charlevoix friends and relatives:

Wolcott, N. Y., June 14, 1913.
Editor Courier,
Will write a line on our journey and let the people know we are in the Eden of the world.
New York state is a lovely country with its mammoth orchards loaded with the fruit. We have visited orchards of 30 acres here and from a little distance they look to our eyes like some of our Michigan forests. They are very large trees and such dense foliage, mostly apple and pear trees. The weather is lovely and this is as fine a place as one could wish to visit or to make a home. The farmers are a thrifty, prosperous people, mostly well to do.

We have been to the shore of Lake Ontario and Port Bay, have seen some Sunfish from the later, which were very sweet and toothsome.

The writer has many relatives and friends in this part of the world whom we have not seen in 36 years, so of course many changes have taken place. The home of my birth has new buildings and other improvements too numerous to mention.

Went to Gloucester, Mass., June 5th, and arrived in Wolcott the 6th and will depart for Michigan June 16th and visit Niagara Falls on that date, then Detroit next, and after a lovely time there and elsewhere, went on way to Mackinaw City to greet friends and neighbors and feel that we are at home once more and that we have spent a lovely five months with relatives and friends in the far east and viewed a most beautiful country.

TROY LAUNDRY OPEN

New Machinery Has Been Added—Will Run the Year Round Hereafter.

Monday of this week marked the opening for the season of the Troy Laundry, and the busy hunt of machinery in that plant betokens a liberal patronage.

During the past few weeks the vicinity of the laundry has been a busy one. Many additions in the way of new machinery have occurred, and every effort will be made that the work of the plant shall be first class in every respect. Hereafter the laundry will be run the year round. Every effort will be made to do all the home work that for some time has been sent to out-of-town laundries. Mr. Darling states that the plant was never in as good condition to handle work as it is at present, and bespeaks for a liberal patronage.

DANDELIONS.

THIS useful and wholesome vegetable makes a nice addition to the luncheon bill of fare when it is served in the form of salad. Dandelion combines well with other greens. The bitter taste which many persons complain of in eating dandelions may be lessened by soaking the greens in salted water for several hours. They must be well washed before serving.

Two Simple Salads.

Plain Dandelion Salad.—Take young, tender dandelion leaves; wash, drain and place in a bowl with an equal quantity of water and three small sliced onions. Add one teaspoonful of salt and dress with a cream or oil dressing. The dandelion leaves may also be used with endive and slices of hard boiled eggs or with finely chopped onions.

Cress and Dandelion Salad.—Take fresh young dandelion leaves, wash carefully and drain. Toss in a salad bowl with equal quantity of fresh gathered cress. Chop a young spring onion fine and sprinkle over the top and serve with plain French dressing.

Cooked Dandelions.

Crennated Dandelion. Wash and trim one-quarter of a peck of dandelion leaves and put them on the fire in plenty of boiling water and boil thirty minutes. Drain and cover with a cream sauce, made as usual, adding one teaspoonful chopped onion.
Dandelion and Ham.—Wash the leaves; then steep in salted water five hours, thus removing the bitterness from the plant. Place ham slank over the fire and when it has boiled for about two hours add the dandelion leaves and cook gently forty-five minutes. The leaves are then drained, chopped fine, seasoned with butter, salt and pepper and served at once, covered with the meat capped fine. Garnish with slices of hard boiled eggs.

Anna Thompson.

How the Story Ended

By F. A. MITCHEL

I am a novelist. I had been working very hard upon a story—"Her Choice"—to finish it, since the printers were waiting for the copy for the last chapters, the whole to be ready for publication within a week. I was writing late one night when for a time—how long I know not—my faculties came to a standstill.

My next remembrance is that I was walking in a grove, strange to say, with my heroine, Evelyn Hope—but only Evelyn Hope, the creature of my imagination, but Evelyn Hope a real being. And she was talking to me.

"You are trying to compel me to marry that Scotchman, and I wish you to understand that I won't do it."

"Angus McGregor is a fine fellow," I replied. "You must marry him. I've written the story with that end in view, and if you won't have him I shall have to tear the whole thing to pieces. Besides, there's no time for you to change your mind at this late date. The book is advertised for the 1st of March."

"I change my mind! You might better state it if you change my mind. You novelists collect a lot of us together and undertake to make us do just what you intend we shall do. Then when we—"

"Klick?"

"Yes, that expresses it exactly. When we klick you say, 'You've got to do as I wish you to do.' And we won't—that is, unless your will coincides with our own."

"Well, then, if you will be so obstreperous, whom do you wish to marry?" She didn't reply to this right off. We were passing through some long grass, and she bent down and picked a blade growing higher than the rest and, putting one end of it in her mouth, said: "You profess to be a novelist. A novelist must understand the human heart. What do you know about the human heart?"

"I thought I was well equipped in that respect."

"And you can't make your heroine marry the man of her choice. Fine instincts you have for divining how love works."

"In woman, I admit my most successful novel was one in which I made up my mind as to the man I would love were I a woman and then made her marry the biggest clump in the lot."

"The woman knew better. At heart he was a noble fellow."

"The fellow I was creating wasn't." "You novelists tire me. The fellow you were creating! Just as if you could create a character?"

"Why not?"

"You set up a dummy and put this into him and that into him, thinking that this and that you have put in will make him act so and so, but it doesn't. He goes off and does the other thing while you stand gazing at him. What's the reason for your failure? Why, your calculations are all wrong."

"I've violated what the playwrights call the dramatic laws, you mean."

"Nonsense. There is no such thing as dramatic laws. If there were there would have to be a mammoth dramatic prison, for the characters would be breaking the laws every day. No; your trouble has been in not foreseeing the thousands of influences through which your characters will pass. One of them commits a horrid murder. Your reader yearns to see him hanged. He escapes from prison the night before the hanging. Straightway your reader's sympathy goes with him and he hopes the murderer will not be caught."

"We are wasting time in generalizing. You have told me that you won't marry Angus, and yet you will not tell me who is your choice."

"Yes, I will. I'll have none of them."

"None of them? Great heavens! What shall I do? The printers are waiting, the publishers are hounding me for the end, and now you, my heroine, on whom I have lavished so much affection, tell me that you will neither marry the man of my choice nor—"

"Your choice?"

"Well, who's been writing the story?"

"You. By the time you have written a few more you'll discover that instead of writing a story the story writes you."

"You don't mean it! But time is pressing. Come, be good. Fix it so that I can finish the yarn and have done with it."

"And you wish to know my preference?"

"I do."

I turned and looked eagerly in her eyes. To my surprise, they fell to the ground and a color rose to her cheeks. With an infinitely sweet look on her face she faded into another real living being, my betrothed, who was bending over me.

"Have I been ill?" I asked.

"Very ill."

"How long?"

"A week."

"Bring me the last chapter of my novel."

The story was written in the first person. In a few hundred words I made the heroine in love with this imaginary person who was telling it, all the while keeping himself in the background. Then I buried the manuscript off to my publisher.

The book met with a great success, which every one said was the sudden turn given to the story by the author making his heroine unexpectedly marry the story teller. "That," said the critics, "was a stroke of genius."

Rev. George W. Bates of Petoskey spent last Thursday afternoon in this city at the home of Rev. H. Atchison, and in the evening spoke at the prayer meeting at the Baptist church.

Gladys Hall, 15 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Hall of Antrim street, was operated on for appendicitis in Petoskey hospital Thursday noon. Last reports were quite favorable.

The season for cutting noxious weeds is at hand. The law regarding this matter is very strict and were it properly enforced as it should be, would be a great benefit to the entire state.

Preliminary steps have been taken to arrange for the next annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican club. The date is not yet set but it will be the latter part of July. There is no campaign on, but it is a good time to touch elbows and show people that the party is healthy and thriving.

According to word received from Lansing, the arrangements for the state encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of Michigan are now all complete, and the indications are that there will be a record breaking attendance. The big encampment will open on Tuesday and will continue through Wednesday and Thursday.

Captain William Finnegan left Tuesday for Manistee, where he will take charge of the Manistee for the season. He will proceed with the boat Friday to Chicago, where she will be dry docked and thoroughly overhauled. The Manistee will then leave Chicago June 25 on her first trip, arriving here on the 26th, her scheduled time.

Suffering From Heat.

According to press dispatches, other cities, especially Chicago and Detroit, have suffered intensely from the heat within the past several days, many prostrations and some deaths being noted. As always the case, Charlevoix's temperature is "just right" at these times, and slight inconveniences is the most that residents and resorters have to put up with on exceedingly warm days. The warm weather is attracting the resorters in goodly numbers, and each week the boat lines and special trains bring more people.

Barber-Clark.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fairbanks of Marion township was the scene of a pretty wedding Sunday, June 15, the participants being Emrey Barber and Miss Clara Emma Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clark, both of this city. The house was prettily decorated, only the immediate relatives being present. Refreshments were served and the happy couple received many congratulations. Mr. and Mrs. Barber will make their home in Charlevoix.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union met Friday afternoon, June 14th at the home of Mrs. David Alexander on the farm two miles south of Charlevoix, which is better known as the "Wakefield Place." The view from the house is beautiful and many exclamations were made over the magnificent view from the porch.

A large number of carriages conveyed those who chose that means of reaching the place of meeting. Many members walked. "Grandma" Ackert was wheeled out in her invalid chair, it being the first meeting she was privileged to attend for over six months. Everyone was present to see Grandma Ackert present.

When noses were counted, the number was found to reach 45 present, probably more counting the children. The hostess had picked a basket of Horn apple blossoms for those who cared to decorate themselves with the beautiful flowers.

The meeting was called to order by its president, Mrs. Alcox. Rev. Atchison led the devotions reading the 27th psalm, followed by prayer. Mr. and Mrs. Atchison sang a duet, "Jesus My Lord, to Thee I Cry." Miss Agnes Rodger prepared a paper on "Child Welfare Topics," bringing out many good points. One thought in particular deserves mention, "Let the child be taught to be constructive rather than destructive." Mrs. Usher thanked the Union for the flowers provided the family during their recent bereavement in the death of Glenn M. Bois. We shall miss the late editor of the Courier who has been so kind in giving the W. C. T. U. space in its column.

Mrs. Wilkinson gave something of a report of the County W. C. T. U. convention recently held at Boyne City. A verse of "Rescue the Perishing" was sung after which Mrs. Alcox gave her report of the state convention held at Detroit. The report was most excellent and showed much care and thought in getting it together. The convention certainly must have been of great interest and value. A rising vote of thanks was given Mrs. Alcox at the close of her report. The program was in charge of Mrs. Lewis.

Recitations from three little girls were enthusiastically received. Little Clara Usher gave a recitation which he was asked to repeat. He repeated it like the little man he was. A recitation by Alice Siminaw was nicely given and applauded. Quotations on "Nature in Her Different Moods," prepared by Mrs. Lewis were read by those present and proved very interesting. One new member was added to the Union ranks.

Adjournment was taken for conversation and a good time generally, followed by a delightful pot luck supper. Surely this meeting added one more to the "Red Letter Days" of our organization.

BOOM GOOD ROADS

Party of Enthusiasts to Reach Charlevoix About the Ninth of July.

That western Michigan is bound to have a good road from Mackinaw to Chicago seems almost certain. A party of road enthusiasts will leave Chicago the first week in July, stopping at all points on the proposed route. The route planned will cover nearly all lake ports on the western part of the state. The slogan is "Lake shore all the way." A big mass meeting will be held at Traverse City upon their arrival. From there they will follow the route to Charlevoix, from here to Petoskey, thence to Mackinaw City. Petoskey is planning to receive them and a public meeting will be held the evening of their arrival. At each town they will be met by autos and escorted along the route. Plans are being made here to meet the party at Norwood, and accompany them to as far as Mackinaw City and return.

The company has $30,000 worth of orders on hand. Directors of the company are planning to have some of the work done at Pellston and Traverse City until the new plant is completed.

Later advices state that an injunction was served on the city officials preventing the city from financially helping out the McManus Company.

THEATRICAL

"The Girl from Luxemburg" will long be referred to as an ideal musical comedy entertainment. It is the biggest thing yet at popular prices—a triple money's worth and no mistake.

"The Girl from Luxemburg" is best entitled to honors owing to its laugh-creating qualities. The comedy is screamingly funny at all times, making a visit to that show real recreation—better than a week at Atlantic City.

There are five scenes in "The Girl from Luxemburg," from rivaling the others in point of luxuriousness. One scene, where the chorus girls struggle in play water, is one of the most talked of stage effects ever shown here.

"The Girl from Luxemburg" is an elaborate production on the order of Ziegfeld's "Follies." One scene follows another, with comedy interpolations that are simply great, with chorus evolutions, strikingly pretty and originally presented, and with well sung musical numbers and dancing diversions that are delightful.

"The Girl from Luxemburg" will appear in the Charlevoix theater at a date which will be announced later. Press notice from all sections speak of it in the highest terms. That Charlevoix will have an opportunity to see this grand musical comedy is due to Manager Loskot's effort to get the best on the road to come to this city.

PRIMARY FUND SHORT

Will Not be Able to Pay Seven Dollars Per Child in State This Year.

At the present it appears that the apportionment of primary school money, which takes place July 15, will be less than $6 per capita. Auditor General Fuller says that there are 774,160 children of school age in Michigan eligible to participate in the apportionment, but the fund lacks $102,121 of having enough to make the apportionment of 7 per capita.

Last year the apportionment was $7.45 for each child. Under the amendment passed at the session at 1911 districts are prohibited from sharing the apportionment where they already have enough to pay the salaries of teachers.

Last year several districts received no money, but they are in the market this year. It is believed that the school teachers have been benefited to some extent, as Auditor Fuller says that there are places where it would be impossible to use all the available funds without increasing the teachers' salaries.

Farm Dairying

Oxford Wrangler, Jersey Bull. Owned by Lord Rothschild

XV.—Farm Cheesemaking.

By LAURA ROSE,
Demonstrator and Lecturer in Dairying
at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

MOST country people are English enough to like home grown and home-made food products. This is mainly why the making of small farm cheeses appeals to them. If made at the time of the year when milk is cheapest one can produce an extra nice quality of cheese at a very reasonable cost.

Cheese does not hold its proper place in our dietary. It should be more largely used on our tables and should often take the place of meat at a meal.

The process of manufacturing cheese on the farm should be as simple as possible, and the time from starting until the cheese is put to press should be between four and five hours. The milk must be sweet and pure, and especially of good flavor. If the fresh morning's milk be mixed with the previous day's milk properly cured for, it is usually in about the right condition for making cheese in regard to the acidity.

In factory work much stress is laid on having the milk at a proper ripeness before setting it, and either the acidimeter or the rennet test is used to determine the amount of acid present in the milk. With the acidimeter it should show from .18 to .19 per cent of acid; by the rennet test, 20 to 24 seconds, when in condition for setting.

A large tin or churn or new tub—in fact, any clean vessel which will hold milk and not injure it—will answer as a cheese vat.

Heat the milk to 86 degrees F. by setting it on the stove and stirring or by placing a clean can of hot water in it. Be prepared to go on with the work or the milk kept at this temperature may develop too much acid. If the cheese is to be colored use a small teaspoonful of cheese color to 100 pounds of milk (ten gallons). Add the color to a pint of the milk and stir well into the milk in the vat.

For every twenty-five pounds of milk use one teaspoonful of rennet. Try to get the rennet at a cheese factory. Junket or rennet tablets, such as drugists sell, are often not satisfactory. Dilute the rennet in a pint of cold water and pour it in a stream up and down the milk, stirring well all the time and continue stirring two or three minutes. Cover the vat to keep the milk warm.

Try the milk occasionally to see when it has sufficiently coagulated by inserting the index finger into the curd and with the thumb making a dent or slight cut in the curd just at the base of the finger, then slowly moving the finger forward. If the curd breaks clean like a firm but tender custard it is ready to cut. The time from setting or adding the rennet to cutting is usually about twenty minutes. The older or riper the milk the more quickly the rennet will set upon it. Overripe milk will give a dry, acidulous cheese.

Cutting the Curd.

If you expect to make much cheese I would advise getting a set of curd knives. Use the horizontal knife first, cutting slowly lengthwise of the vat. Then with the perpendicular knife cut crosswise and afterwards lengthwise of the vat. This makes the curd into cubes from a quarter inch to a half inch square, according to the knife used. For factory work the quarter inch wire knife is highly recommended. While more tedious, a long bladed carving knife or a thin bladed sword answers the purpose. First cut lengthwise into strips one-third inch wide, then crosswise the same, then horizontally as well as you can. Begin stirring gently, and continue the cutting if the carving knife is used till the curd is of uniform size.

While the stirring is going on heat may be slowly applied. The vat may be set in a vessel holding warm water, or a clean can filled with hot water may be put into the vat. After the whey has separated pretty well from the curd a pallful may be dipped out and heated to 130 to 140 degrees. Do not have any curd in the whey. The warm whey is returned to the vat, and in a little while more whey may be dipped out and heated. Half an hour should be taken to get the curd heated to 98 degrees. If heated too quickly the curd does not expel enough moisture, and a weak bodied cheese is the result. It is a bad fault to get the curd too warm. After it is brought to 98 degrees it is not necessary to stir continuously, but it must be frequently stirred to prevent the curd from matting, and the temperature must be maintained. It is well to keep the vat covered.

The curd is usually ready to dip in from three and a quarter to three and a half hours from the time the rennet is added to the milk. The right condition for the curd to be in at this stage may be ascertained by feeling the curd. If it is rather firm, has a shiny appearance and falls apart when pressed in the hand, it is ready to have the whey drawn. By the acidimeter it should show from .18 to .19 per cent of acid, or when a little of the curd is squeezed well in the hand and pressed against a hot iron in stove poker answers the purpose) and gently withdrawn if it leaves hairlike threads a quarter of an inch long on the iron it is a sign the whey should be removed.

If the vat is without a tap dip the curd and whey into a strainer dipper or colander and put the curd in a large cheesecloth on a level butter worker. If you have not a butter worker device a wooden rack for the bottom of a large tin and spread the cloth over it. The curd must be well stirred for ten or fifteen minutes to allow the whey to escape.

The curd may now be salted at the rate of one ounce to every twenty-five pounds of milk. Sprinkle the salt over the curd, stir well and allow it to stand ten or fifteen minutes.

The Cheese Hoop.

One cannot get along without a cheese hoop. It may be made of wood or heavy tin, but must be round, straight, strong and the ends clean cut without any rim. A nice size is 6 inches in diameter by 12 inches high. This will press a cheese weighing from six to ten pounds. The circle or follower of wood placed in the hoop on top of the curd must fit well or the cheese will have shoulders.

A bandager may be made of ordinary tin and should fit closely inside the hoop and be four inches higher than the hoop, but must have no wire rim around it.

Cut a piece of cheesecloth the length of the bandager and the width around it. Sew up the sides and run a thread around one end and slip it on the outside of the bandager.

Place the hoop on a board in a tin pan, put a square of cotton wet in the hot water on top of the hoop, then place on the prepared bandager and shove it to the bottom. Put in the salted curd, press down well with the hand, pull up the bandager and the cheese is inside the cheesecloth in the hoop; lay on a square of wet cotton and put on the follower.

Many contrivances may be used to supply the pressure. A elder press answers. I use the old fashioned fulcrum and lever press, as with it the pressure is continuous. This press is easily constructed.

CHEESE AND CURD KNIVES.

(A)—Curd from milk cooled, but not aerated; (B)—curd from milk aerated and cooled. The numerous round holes which are shown in B are the result of the growth of gas forming bacteria in the milk. The formation of gas holes in the curd is usually accompanied by very objectionable flavors.)

structed. Get a strong board or a piece of scantling eight or ten feet long. Place it under a ledge, put the cheese on the floor or on a bench near the ledge and put a small block or board on the center of the cheese for the scantling to rest on. Place a heavy weight—about fifty pounds—on the end of the scantling. It is well not to put all the weight on at once.

Dressing the Cheese.

The next morning the cheese should be taken from the hoop, dampened with hot water on the outside, the bandage pulled up and trimmed so as to allow it to extend half an inch over the ends. Cut a circle of stiffened cheesecloth the size of the top, place carefully on the cheese, cover with a square of wet cotton, place the hoop on top and force the cheese into it.

Finish off the other end in the same way. Put again to press till the next day. Take from the hoop and place in a cool cellar, turning it upside down every day for a month, and after that occasionally.

Do not worry if it molds. The mold will be on the outside only and should be well washed off before the cheese is cut. At the end of two months it should be ready for eating, but is better if kept for five or six months.

If the milk is sweet and good, and the necessary care be taken in the manufacture, this method produces a rich, meaty cheese, much liked by every one. The cheese resembles a nice Canadian cheddar, but is more open and softer in texture.

FLYING BOATS WILL STOP HERE

Charlevoix Will Have Two of the Biggest Days in Its History.

WILL LAND IN ROUND LAKE

Drop in at Ten Minute Intervals and Leave the Following Day.

Special Trains to be Run From Traverse City and Excursion on Boat Lines—Committee Busy Making Arrangements.

The contract has been signed making Charlevoix one of the stopping places of the International Great Lakes Flying Boat contest. Under the plans now underway the boats will arrive here about noon on the 11th, and leave about the same time on the 12th.

The greatest flying boat pilots in the world, racing the most wonderful models of flying craft will leave Chicago on July 8, and with a schedule of an average of about 100 miles a day, less than two hours of actual flying time, will reach Detroit on July 16, stopping at various points on the trip.

William Pickens, director of the Aero club of America, spent Friday and Saturday in the city in conference with a number of business men. There will be a general prize fund of $25,000 which will be awarded the fortunate pilots at the end of the race.

"There is nothing that will draw so big a crowd to Charlevoix for two days as a visit of the great flying boat race contestants," said Mr. Pickens. "Automobile parties from all inland points within a radius of 50 to 100 miles will visit the ships of the contestants and huge crowds will come in on all railway and boat lines."

Only twelve stops in all will be made, Charlevoix the only regular stop, or night control where all contestants must check in and out between Manistee and Mackinac Island.

"This is a charity proposition. The money subscribed must come from the business interests that will derive a direct benefit from a town full of people. The city will be crowded with money-spending visitors for two days."

"The sight of a dozen of these great air machines will be something entirely new for the people here. Flying is the newest sport for the wealthy class and is the novelty just as automobile racing was years ago. The boats cover from 60 to 75 miles an hour in the air and rise from and land on the water."

A meeting was held in the council chambers Friday evening, and after listening to Mr. Pickens' proposition, those present decided that Charlevoix should make an effort to have the flying boats, and Harry Nicholls as chairman, and Lisle Shanahan as secretary of a committee on arrangements was appointed consisting of the following men: C. C. Bailey, Charles M. Rice, E. C. Waller, L. S. See and W. E. Hampton.

It is planned to have the flying boats leave their last stopping place at ten minute intervals, thus arriving at Charlevoix in a continuous flight, lasting in all at least two hours. The time of arrival will be on Friday, July 11, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock. They will land in Round Lake and later in the day rise from there and separate, part of them landing in Pine Lake in front of the Inn and the balance opposite the Belvedere. About 9 o'clock the morning of the 12th they will again land in Round Lake and stay there until the time of their departure. Upon leaving Charlevoix, the machines will leave at ten minute intervals, thus giving the great crowds here to be present a sight worth going hundreds of miles to witness.

From all sources the universal sentiment was to make Charlevoix one of the stopping points, thus furnishing our summer visitors and home people a sight never to be forgotten.

The committee have planned and are making arrangements to run a special train from Traverse City, stopping at all intermediate points.

Our sister cities of Boyne City and East Jordan will run boat excursions, and all other cities within a radius of 75 miles will be thoroughly billed. The committee will raise a large advertising fund and it is the consensus of opinion that July 11-12 will be the greatest days of celebration Charlevoix has ever seen.

Our summer visitors have entered into the event with enthusiasm, kindly accepting work on the committee. The great majority of our business men and citizens have cooperated heartily with the committee to make this the greatest event in the history of the north. One or two, however, in lines of business that will derive the greatest financial benefit from the enterprise, have refused utterly to contribute a cent. One stated that he would get just as if he did, and that he "wouldn't give a quarter." But we are thankful that there enough live ones in Charlevoix to get along without the help of such men. We would suggest, however, that these men close their places of business, hang suitable crepe on their doors, and thus advertise to all that they are dead.

ASKS FOR SANE FOURTH

Communication From State Fire Marshal in Regard to This Matter.

Issues a Bulletin Containing Warning and Precautionary Suggestions to Public.

State Fire Marshal C. A. Palmer makes a plea for a safe and sane observance of Independence day in a bulletin issued from his department. He points to the fact that in 1909 there were twenty cities in the state where sane celebrations were held and he says that the list of dead or injured has decreased each succeeding year. He claims that there was not a single injury in the cities where the Fourth of July was quietly observed last year.

"Each year our celebration of Independence day is marred and our satisfaction and pleasure made less keen by accidents which apparently in many cases might have been avoided," says Palmer. "It may be well that we in the celebration of this day in which we all take so much pride should co-operate with the fire chiefs and others whose duty it is to combat conflagrations and to prevent the same where possible."

"Last year the fire losses in Michigan as a direct consequence of the Fourth of July were less than ever before and it is to be hoped that the people of this great commonwealth will this year reduce that splendid record."

"All chiefs of fire departments and others whose duty it is to see that the laws in relation to the use of explosives or the prevention of fires are enforced are directed to exercise unusual caution."

MARRIED IN WEST

Clarence Ouzance, Former Charlevoix Boy, Now Located at Seattle.

A very pretty wedding took place at the Ravenna Methodist Protestant Church at Seattle, Washington, on Thursday evening, June 19, at six o'clock, when Clarence Winfield Ouzance and Mable Estelle Sontar were united in marriage by their pastor, Rev. S. C. Benninger. The bride was very sweet and charming in cream white and satin and long filmy veil caught into place by clusters of lilies of the valley. The church was beautifully decorated with marguerites, ferns and roses.

After the wedding a reception was held and refreshments served in the church parlors.

During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Ouzance left the city for a few days honeymoon trip expecting to visit several Puget Sound cities. Mr. Ouzance since leaving Charlevoix, about two years ago, has held a position with the Washington Guarantee and Abstract Company.

CAN THE CITY OF CHARLEVOIX SELL WATER AT LESS THAN COST

Action of Board of Public Works in Raising Water Rates Brings Forth Sharp Criticism—Many on Meters Who are not Entitled to Privilege—Citizens Willing to Pay for Water at Production Cost.

The leading topic for discussion on the streets and various business places around the city for the last week has been the action of the Board of Public Works raising the water rate from 10 cents per 1000 gallons to 20 cents per thousand gallons on all places where a water meter is used.

It looks to many, especially to those on meters, as being a prohibitive rate, far above that which is charged in neighboring cities. Some say that the proposed rate will compel them to stop using water for sprinkling their lawns and otherwise beautifying their homes. Others say that it will have a tendency to drive away many of our summer visitors, and others cite different opinions regarding it, some quite radical and some so unreasonable that a bystander overhearing their remarks, would form the opinion that the city was sure to go to the dogs, or dry up and blow away.

The Board of Public Works surely must have had some reason for raising the water rates. It is a well known fact that for a number of years our city water plant has been running behind. Each year it has shown a shortage, but up to the present time no action has been taken regarding the matter.

Upon investigation, it is shown by the city's books that there are 523 flat rate water consumers, 112 regular (twelve months per year) and 41 summer (or short term) users of water on meters. The 523 flat rate users are divided into different classes, the rate being based from $1 to $14, according to the number of rooms, bath, closets, lavatories, lawn cocks in the house.

The ordinance regulating the use of water per year on each house of the different classes was passed in 1892, and has never been changed from that time to this day. In 1909 a motion was made during a regular meeting of the Board of Public Works, setting a minimum rate for users of water meters at $1.00 or 10c per 1,000 gallons of water used per quarter, excess to be charged at the rate of 10c per gallon above the minimum of 10,000 gallons.

The ordinance passed in 1902 made this provision: That all residences, hotels or private boarding houses whose total water rate amounted to over $15 per year, be allowed to put in meters at the owners' expense, thereby cutting their water rate to a minimum rate of $4.00 per year, excess above 10,000 gallons per month at 10 cents per 1,000 gallons.

This ordinance states plainly that no residence, hotel or boarding house be allowed to install a meter unless their rate amounts to $15.00 or over. But in the face of this, the city's book show 178 water users on meters. Residences whose total water rates amount to less than $10.00 have had meters installed. Making this plain to our readers, a conservative estimate of places not entitled to meters, under the ordinance, will run close to a hundred.

This is the present state of affairs. A 14-room house, containing four or five bath rooms, closets, lavatories, laundry and lawn cocks, is entitled to a meter, the water rate being $4.00 per year minimum, all water used in excess of 10,000 gallons to be charged for at the rate of 10 cents per 1,000 gallons. If no excess above the 10,000 gallons is used, but $4.00 per year is paid to the city for water privilege.

In the same block you will find an 8-room house with bath, closet, lavatory and lawn cock, paying exactly the same rate as the 14-room house. Another comparison. Two side by side, one on a meter, another on the flat rate. Both have the same conveniences. The house on the flat rate pays for water privilege $10.00 per year. The house on a meter using only the minimum amount of water stipulated, pays $4.00 per year, and has the privilege of sprinkling their lawns any hour of the day, while the flat rate man can only use water for sprinkling purposes during the hours of 6 to 8 a. m. and 6 to 8 p. m. Where is there justice in this—who is getting the most for their money in these cases, and there are many similar instances in the city.

Another comparison of the injustice and unfairness of our present water rates: John Jones, wife and one child lives in a five room cottage. If he has a bath tub, closet and lavatory and lawn cock, he pays under the existing flat rate, $9.00 per year. Along side him lives Widow Brown and four or five children. Her house has the same conveniences as Mr. Jones, and she pays the same water rate. During the summer months, to keep the wolf from the door and provide for her family, she takes in washings. To increase her returns she employs four or five women to work for her, and does washings from 10 to 12 hours per day. Is there in comparison between the amount of water consumed by each of these two families. Yet they pay identically the same rate and have the same privileges.

Under the present state of affairs the water plant of the city of Charlevoix does not receive enough returns for water supplied to its consumers to pay actual running expense. Each year the deficit has been covered by the excess in the electric fund, the electric light plant being on a paying basis and charging enough for current to offset the loss in operating the water plant.

COUNCIL FIXES SPEED LIMIT

Ten Mile an Hour the Limit in Business Portions of City.

Automobiles Must Not be Left Standing With Motor Running Without Someone in Charge.

Owners and drivers of all automobiles and drivers of other vehicles are receiving the following notice, calling attention to Ordinance No. 116, known as the "Traffic Ordinance":

"Drivers of motor vehicles must display their official number on front and rear of vehicles so that it does not swing, and must also obey the state law as to speed. Ten miles an hour in business portions of the city. This includes Bridge street, Park avenue, Clinton, Mason and Antrim streets from State street east to end of street. On all side streets the rate of speed is 15 miles an hour. This includes especially Belvedere and Dixon avenues. Remember that Dixon avenue is not a speedway."

"No automobile shall be left standing in any street with its motor or engine running unless some person be left in charge, and lights must be shown as required by the state law."

"Drivers of all vehicles—the ordinance must be obeyed as regards keeping the right hand of the street, and making proper turns at corners. Dray and hack drivers must remember to keep on the proper side of Dixon avenue; the center of the street is not to be used except in passing vehicles."

"The police department does not desire to cause any hardship, but the above must be observed or prosecution will follow."

It is believed autoists and hack drivers will comply with the above without any trouble. A little caution on their part will go a great ways in avoiding danger and making automobiling within the city a still greater pleasure.

In driving along the business streets, automobilists should keep to the right hand side of the thoroughfare. In turning corners they should go to street intersections and turn as square as possible. Machines should be slowed down at the corners and danger signals sounded, whether another vehicle or person is in sight or not.

Automobilists should not attempt to drive their machines through a crowd, even at a low rate of speed, as the chance of injuring someone is great.

The observance of these suggestions will be greatly appreciated by the city officials as well as by the many unfortunate in the city who are unable to possess cars.

Tuscarora Aground.

The revenue cutter Tuscarora, bound from Milwaukee to meet her sister ship, the Norrell, struck the rocks off Vidal Shoals, Michigan, in Lake Huron Thursday night and is in a serious condition. The crew of 65 was rescued by the Norrell. The cutter was proceeding under full steam and making twelve miles an hour through the dense fog when she hit the rocks.

PARCELS POST UNDER FIRE

Merchants Complain of Zone System and Breakage of Goods.

MANY CHANGES SUGGESTED

Believe Change of Zones to Smaller Ones Would be Beneficial.

Breakage in Fragile Goods so Great That Use of System of Transportation Has Been Abandoned—Want Change.

Postmaster General Burleson is getting a good many petitions and resolutions from merchants' associations with respect to the parcel post service.

So far the associations heard from are not asking for changes in the parcel post law. Under the law the postmaster general has large discretion in making regulations and the view of the merchants is that the shortcomings which they see in the service as it is now administered can be corrected by the postmaster general without any assistance from congress.

The merchants' associations in the eastern cities are all opposed to the present zone system. They want the zones eliminated or reduced in number. They insist that the zone system created by former Postmaster General Hitchcock discriminates against all those portions of the country which lie at or near its boundaries and in favor of those portions which lie in the interior.

It is asserted by the associations of the eastern cities that the aggregate of the portions of the country discriminated against in this way far exceeds in area and population those portions which lie in the central part of the country and have the full benefit of the operation of the law.

In their demand that the zones be eliminated or reduced in number, the merchants in the eastern cities say: "In the very nature of the zone system, the greater the number of zones, the more aggravated the results, while the smaller the number of zones, the closer to a minimum the injurious results approximate. Moreover, from the standpoint of the operation of the parcel post as an administrative matter, as well as from the standpoint of use by shippers, we believe that the reduction of zones to the smallest possible number would be beneficial. The greater the number of zones the more complicated the question of rates, and the labor and greater the cost of administration in the department."

The eastern merchants suggest that if the postmaster general cannot see his way clear to eliminate the zone system altogether, he provide for a total of not more than three and preferably not more than two zones.

There is one thing on which the merchants in every section of the country seem to be agreed, and it is that the insurance rate of 10 cents per package, up to a valuation of $50 is too high. Representation is made by the merchants to the postmaster general that most of the shippers have refused to continue to use the postoffice insurance. Besides the objection based on the excessive rate, merchants point out that the department is too slow in making payment for losses.

It is shown that under the law these payments must be made out of appropriations made exclusively for that purpose and are made only after careful and minute investigation of the circumstances surrounding each particular claim. The merchants suggest that, either by administrative regulation, or if necessary, by legislative enactment, the insurance rate should be placed on a reasonable basis, and that the premiums derived therefrom should constitute a separate fund to be used by the postoffice department for the payment of losses and the request is made that a system be devised whereby payments may be made with reasonable promptitude. Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS

CHAPTER VI.

The Strickland-Tucker Feud.

HALF an hour later as Colonel Todhunter emerged from the law office of Judge Bolling he heard a sudden hurrying of footsteps, and Sam Birdsong joined him, breathless and much perturbed.

"What's on your mind now, Sam?" asked the colonel. "Tat'tat often you go gallopin' aroun' with your tongue hangin' out of your mouth like a young dog's at his first rabbit chase. What's the trouble?"

"I was jes' startin' out to look you up, colonel," replied Sam. "There's trouble enough, sub. Tom Strickland's got to drinkin' and pickin' a quarrel with Stam Tucker in the hotel barroom, and you better come quick, sub, and prevent its bein' a mighty serious difficulty."

"I ain't got no patience with you young fellows here in Niveveh, Sam Birdsong," commented the colonel. "When Tom Strickland gets two or three drinks under his belt and wants to pick a fuss why don't some of you turn in and lick the stuffin' out'n him? That's one of the best cures for the whiskey quarrelin' habit that ever was invented, sub."

The colonel chuckled as he spoke. "The most quarrelsome man in his cups I ever knew, Sam, was old Bob Prewitz, in my reg'ment durin' the late unpleasantness, and he was cured just that way, sub. Sam Fossbrooke made a point of campin' on Bob's trail ever' time Bob got to naggin' any of the other fellows, and Sam'd thrash Bob till his own mother wouldn't ha' known him, sub. And, sub, before the war was over I'll be double hanstrung if Bob Prewitz wasn't a teetotaler, sub, and be never got fightin' drunk after the war neither till he'd put two whole counties between him and Sam Fossbrooke. Some of you boys ought to try that plan on Tom Strickland, sub."

"Colonel," answered Sam solemnly. "It's a sort o' curse on the Stricklands, that fierce temper o' their'n when they get under the influence of liquor, sub. You musn't forget that Tom's own uncle killed his best friend, Lawrence Tolliver, durin' a spree and then drank himself to death afterwards tryin' to forget it, sub. It's a curse, sub, that's what it is!"

"It ain't no curse that can't be tifted easy as raisin' your little finger, Sam Birdsong," said the colonel. "All in the world Tom Strickland's got to do is to leave whiskey alone—he ain't a hard drinker now, and maybe he never will be, but he's got to leave it alone altogether. It don't agree with him. The Todhunters has got that same kind of a curse in their family, only it's cucumbers 'stead of whiskey. Th' ain't none of us Todhunters can eat cucumbers without let'n' doubled up with cramp colic. Well, sub, I lifted that curse by eatin' cucumbers out o' my list of vittles same as if such a thing never growed, and Tom Strickland or any other man can do the same thing with whiskey, sub."

Then the colonel tapped Sam on the shoulder. "And let me tell you one thing, my boy," he continued. "All this here talk about the terrible hard fight necessary to break off from a bad habit makes me tired, sub. A man don't never have to fight but one day's fight at a time, and there's always a night's rest comin' in between if he don't lay awake pityin' himself, sub. I know what I'm a-talkin' about. It ain't but a twelve hours' fight no time, and a man who can't fight that long is a mighty measly specimen of a man, sub."

"That's all very well, colonel," spoke Sam uneasily, "but Tom has egged Stam Tucker on till Stam's hurried out o' the barroom, white in the face, holle' over his shoulder that he'll be back in a minute—and you know just what that means, sub!"

Colonel Todhunter's face grew instantly grave. "He's gone to get his shootin' iron—the d—d little fool!" he exclaimed. "Tell me, Sam, is Tom Strickland armed?"

"I don't think he is, sub, but he's a-waitin' for Stam Tucker in that there barroom, and he's just feelin' reckless enough to give Stam every chance in the world for shootin' him after he himself picked the fuss and forced the personal difficulty, colonel."

"You come along with me, Sam," said the colonel. "Why the blazes and Sam Hill didn't you tell me all this at the start, sub?"

Swiftly they crossed the town square and entered the barroom of the Niveveh hotel. Tom Strickland, alone now but for the bartender, stood with one elbow resting on the bar.

"Howdy, colonel!" he cried. "You and Sam are just in time to join me in a drink, str. What'll you have?"

"Tom," replied the colonel, "ordinarily I'd be glad to accept your invitation, but not today, my boy. I want you to go home, Tom."

Young Strickland smiled. "I'm sorry to disoblige you, colonel," he replied, "but I don't feel like goin' home right away."

"You've got to go, Tom," replied the colonel.

"Well, now, str," suggested the other, "that's fairly open to argument in spite of your bein' so positive about it. I've got a special reason for stayin', colonel."

"Yes, I know, Tom. You're waitin' to have a personal difficulty with Stam Tucker, sub."

Tom Strickland laughed. "You're called the turn, str, and under the circumstances you'll have to agree yourself that I can't go now—not for a few minutes anyway."

"I don't agree to no such thing, you blamed young fool!" ejaculated Colonel Todhunter. "Do you reckon I'm a-goin' to let you and Stam Tucker shoot each other full o' holes or let you wait, unarmed, for him to get a crack at you just because you've seen fit to come into town and begin strakin', sub?"

"We're both free white and twenty-one, colonel," said Tom Strickland.

"How are you goin' to prevent it?" At this Colonel Todhunter lost his temper. "I'll prevent it by thrashin' you within an inch of your life, sub. If you don't turn right around and get out o' this here barroom, that's how!" he announced resolutely. "I ain't a-goin' to stand no foolishness, Tom!"

"That ain't fair, Colonel Todhunter," protested Tom Strickland. "You're Miss Mary's father, and you're my father's oldest and best friend, str. I wouldn't lift my hand against you for the world—but I've got to wait here till Stam Tucker gets back!"

"Tom," said Colonel Todhunter, "you've either got to go home right now, sub, or thrash me, or take the best thrashin' from me you ever got in all your life, sub!"

Tom Strickland looked into Colonel Todhunter's eyes. They shone with the light of righteous battle. It was a preposterous situation. The humor of it suddenly struck the younger man, and he laughed outright. Then, suddenly, looking beyond Colonel Todhunter, his own eyes hardened into a dangerous anger.

"It's too late, colonel!" he exclaimed exultantly. "Here comes the very man we're talking about!"

As he spoke Stamford Tucker entered the barroom, advancing directly toward him.

"I reckon you still insist on a personal difficulty with me, Tom Strickland?" he asked. "You ain't changed your mind none since the last few minutes?"

"I don't change my mind that easy," replied Tom Strickland, smiling. "Especially when a little upstart like you gets to talkin' too freely about my father. You've got to stop it or else make up your mind to take the consequences."

"It ain't what I've said about your father that's rubbin' you the wrong way," retorted Stam Tucker. "It's because you've found out that I'm standin' too good a chance with Miss Mary Todhunter to suit you!"

Tom Strickland sprang at the speaker. As he did so Stam whipped out a pistol. It was quickly done, but not quick enough to give an opportunity to fire before the other struck. Tom's fist smashed into his face and felled him to the floor. The pistol flew ten feet away.

There was a moment's silence. "Get up," said Tom, "and come at me like a man. I'll thrash you with in an inch of your life!"

Stam Tucker staggered to his feet, wiping the blood from his face. But he made no move toward the man who had struck him.

Tom Strickland stepped coolly to where the pistol lay, picked it up deliberately and put it into his own pocket.

"I'll get even with you for this, Strickland!" cried young Tucker. "I'll even up things before I'm done with you!"

"You'll never have a better time than right now," replied Tom. "But if you ain't in the humor I'll leave your pistol with the bartender here in a little while and you can get it later. But I give you fair warning, Stam Tucker."

The two old friends faced each other silently.

"That certainly is a serious situation, Bill," spoke Colonel Todhunter at last. "It's so almighty serious, Thurs," returned the other, "that I can't see my way out of it."

But at this Colonel Todhunter snorted. "That's where you're wrong, Bill Strickland," he exclaimed. "I've been in tighter places 'n anybody on earth."

"The fellow who come out of a spree with hot coppers in his hands, but I'll be Jim swizzled if I ever got into one I couldn't get out of. And we ain't in that kind of a one now. How much money do you need?"

Colonel Strickland shook his head. "There's no good you and me figuring along that line, old fellow. We need at least $3,000, and while it's pretty certain old Leslie will raise that amount eventually that doesn't cut any ice now. We need the money right here at the start."

"And you can't raise it?" asked Colonel Todhunter.

"No, I can't," answered Colonel Strickland. "And I get what a man deserves for thinkin' he knows how to save the country when he don't even know how to take care of himself."

"That ain't so, Bill," answered Colonel Todhunter sturdily. "And anybody that thinks they can keep you from bein' governor of Mizzoomb simply be cause you're a poor man bin' got no other think- comin', sub. You draw your personal note for $3,000 in my favor. I'll endorse it right here, and if I don't get that money it's because the Niveveh National bank don't know a good thing when it sees it."

"What do you mean, Todhunter?" asked Colonel Strickland. Instant protest in his eyes.

"I mean this, Bill Strickland," he replied sternly. "This ain't no time for you to be pickin' fights with old Eph Tucker's son. It don't look right, and it won't help your father none in his political fight, either."

"I didn't bring it on, colonel," replied Tom Strickland. "Stamford Tucker's seen fit to say things about my father that no man can say and not get a licking from me, if I'm man enough to lick him. That's all there is to it, str."

To save his life Colonel Todhunter could not continue his rebuke. But he managed to part from Tom Strickland with something like an expression of disapproval on his countenance.

"I reckon I ain't cut out to preach to other people what they should do and what they shouldn't," he confessed to himself later. "I ought to have given that blamed young fool a lecture as long as my arm, but it just wasn't in me to do it under the circumstances. And that's wrong, because the only good excuse an old man's got for livin' is to sort out as a guidepost to keep young men from followin' the road that lead to trouble. Bein' mighty little root in that line myself, I'm a-goin' to unload my responsibility on old Bill Strickland and let him straighten Tom out his own way, sub. And then I'll ask the Old Marster up above to make me better litt'n for any duty than t seem to be at this precise moment, sub, judgin' from the way I weakened on Tom!"

Suddenly one day during the campaign the Hon. William J. Strickland returned from St. Louis. An expression of acute worryment so contrary to its customary cheerfulness rested on his face that Colonel Todhunter, entering the candidate's Niveveh law office, could not but remark the change.

"Want on earth's the matter, Bill?" he asked. "You look like the last rose 'n summer."

Colonel Strickland attempted a smile. "Oh, nothing particular, Thurs," he replied. "I reckon I was just meditating on the vanity of human life."

"Well, it must have been 'Hark' from the tombs a holeful sound," all right," laughed Colonel Todhunter. Then he took a second look at his friend.

"You're lyin' to me, Bill Strickland," he said. "There's somethin' gone wrong, and it's on your mind. What is it?"

"Thurs," responded the other, "it ain't anything you can help. There's no good in my unloadin' my troubles on you just because you've got broad shoulders."

"I understand anyhow," returned Colonel Todhunter. "You ought to know folks can shed other folks' troubles off'n their shoulders like water from a duck's back."

But Colonel Strickland shook his head. "There's been a backset somewhere along the line," announced Colonel Todhunter solemnly. "And you've got to tell me what it is. Quit settin' there lookin' like a poor man at a cash sale, Bill Strickland, dumb, 'cause money's all that talks."

At this Colonel Strickland laughed heartily. "That's where you lit the nail on the head," he said. "Money, the mean and dirty thing that can whip the best man in the world—that's the trouble, Thurs."

"It's generally the other man's money that looks dirty, Bill," Colonel Todhunter commented, chuckling. "I got to acknowledge the corn myself. I never had a dollar of my own that didn't look mighty clean and good to me. But what's this particular money trouble?"

"Well, if you will have it, Thurs, it's this," replied Colonel Strickland. "I'm up a tree in the matter of campaign expenses. Old Governor Leslie was sure he could raise a Strickland campaign fund by asking the right men and telling them what he proposed to do with it, they knowin' that Steve Yancey ain't fit to be governor of Mizzoomb. But so far be's met with mighty poor success. He told me all about it in St. Louis yesterday. I ain't got a dollar in the world, and we've established headquarters in St. Louis and Kansas City that's got to be kept up. How we're going to do it is what I can't figure out."

The two old friends faced each other silently.

"That certainly is a serious situation, Bill," spoke Colonel Todhunter at last. "It's so almighty serious, Thurs," returned the other, "that I can't see my way out of it."

But at this Colonel Todhunter snorted. "That's where you're wrong, Bill Strickland," he exclaimed. "I've been in tighter places 'n anybody on earth."

"The fellow who come out of a spree with hot coppers in his hands, but I'll be Jim swizzled if I ever got into one I couldn't get out of. And we ain't in that kind of a one now. How much money do you need?"

Colonel Strickland shook his head. "There's no good you and me figuring along that line, old fellow. We need at least $3,000, and while it's pretty certain old Leslie will raise that amount eventually that doesn't cut any ice now. We need the money right here at the start."

"And you can't raise it?" asked Colonel Todhunter.

"No, I can't," answered Colonel Strickland. "And I get what a man deserves for thinkin' he knows how to save the country when he don't even know how to take care of himself."

"That ain't so, Bill," answered Colonel Todhunter sturdily. "And anybody that thinks they can keep you from bein' governor of Mizzoomb simply be cause you're a poor man bin' got no other think- comin', sub. You draw your personal note for $3,000 in my favor. I'll endorse it right here, and if I don't get that money it's because the Niveveh National bank don't know a good thing when it sees it."

"What do you mean, Todhunter?" asked Colonel Strickland. Instant protest in his eyes.

"I mean this, Bill Strickland," he replied sternly. "This ain't no time for you to be pickin' fights with old Eph Tucker's son. It don't look right, and it won't help your father none in his political fight, either."

"I didn't bring it on, colonel," replied Tom Strickland. "Stamford Tucker's seen fit to say things about my father that no man can say and not get a licking from me, if I'm man enough to lick him. That's all there is to it, str."

To save his life Colonel Todhunter could not continue his rebuke. But he managed to part from Tom Strickland with something like an expression of disapproval on his countenance.

"I reckon I ain't cut out to preach to other people what they should do and what they shouldn't," he confessed to himself later. "I ought to have given that blamed young fool a lecture as long as my arm, but it just wasn't in me to do it under the circumstances. And that's wrong, because the only good excuse an old man's got for livin' is to sort out as a guidepost to keep young men from followin' the road that lead to trouble. Bein' mighty little root in that line myself, I'm a-goin' to unload my responsibility on old Bill Strickland and let him straighten Tom out his own way, sub. And then I'll ask the Old Marster up above to make me better litt'n for any duty than t seem to be at this precise moment, sub, judgin' from the way I weakened on Tom!"

SUCCESS

- Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.
- In business most men fail even to get a start, because they lack money.
- The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.
- You can open a savings account in this bank with $1.00 or more. We invite you to do so.

HE WANTED GORE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

I had heard from the old man's neighbors how his reputation as a rough and tumble fighter was once saved by his wife, and, though I had thrown out hints several times, neither of them seemed inclined to tell the tale. I therefore had to wait till the signs came right. One autumn day Zeb took me along with him as he visited his traps for mink along a creek, and as we rested on a rock previous to the long walk back to his cabin he said, "That ain't much of a yarn."

"But I want to hear it."
 "Well, I'll begin by sayin' that I'd worked so hard for three or four years after the war that I got all run down.
 That same year a critter named Pike moved into the neighborhood. He talked so loud and bluffed so high that everybody was skeert of him, and he jest went around steppin' high and bossin' the roost. That critter used to come down to my cabin and brag and blow and tell how many men he'd licked, and one day I gin him plain to understand that I didn't believe his stories. That made him mad, and he went away, sayin' as how he'd wallop me for his next victim. He knowed
 I was in poor health and couldn't fight a ty, but every two or three days he'd come down and stand in front of the cabin and yell:

"Now, then, Zeb White, cum out yere and git the awfulest wallopin' a human critter ever received. I'm no hand to brag, but I kin tie both hands behind me and then chew yo' up in two minits. I've licked forty-seven different men and never got my nose skinned. Either own up that yo' dasn't fight a man or cum out and be walloped."

"That's the way he'd talk to me," continued Zeb, "and I'd get so mad that I cried like a child. Bimeby I began to get a little better, and one day when he was callin' on me to cum fo' th and be walloped I told him that if he'd show up a week from that day I'd tackle him. He went away crack-in' his heels and whoopin' and rejoicin', and the old woman sez to me, sez she:

"Zeb White, if yo' was a well man yo' could wallop that critter befo' I could make a hoe cake, but yo' ax been down the banks all summer, and yo' can't git well in a week. I'm sorry yo' passed yo' word, but beln' it's passed we'll have to abide by it. I'll git whisky and roots tomorrow and brace yo' up."

"And did you get better?" I asked.
 "No, I got worse. Whisky and roots didn't do me no good. When the week was up I was in bed and too feeble to walk across the room. That pesky critter knowed jest how it was with me, and git he cum and stood in front of the cabin and shouted to the old woman:

"Would yo' do me the everlastin' kindness to tell him to step out yere while I chew his ears off and atay my hunger?"

"He's sick abed just now, but if yo'll cum back arter dark he'll make yo' eat grass and holler like a calf."
 "Then yo' kin be lookin' for me."
 Willder White, I'll be kinder sorry to see death take him from yo', but I must hev him for my forty-eightth victim.
 Good afternoon. Willder White, good afternoon."

"I cried myself to sleep, and it was arter dark when I woke up. That var-nunt had cum back, 'corlin' to promise, and was in front of the cabin a-shoutin'."

"Zeb White, the time has cum for yo' to be pulverized. Mebbe I won't do no mo' than chew yo' ears off and cripple yo' fur life, but I'll do that much for yo'."

"Jest about the time he begun to boler my ole woman begun to git out of her clothes and inter mine.
 "What yo' gwine to do?" sez I.
 "Gwine ont to wallop that critter on die!" sez she.

"It wasn't no use to talk to her. When she got all dressed up she looked like a man, and as she stood in the door that varnunt cracked his heels together and crowed like a rooster."

"And about the fight?" I asked.
 Zeb was silent for several minutes.
 "It was full of surprises," he answered. "That varnunt was only a blow hard arter all. The ole woman walked around him two or three times and then called in. He hollered at the first jump and tried to git away, but she wouldn't let him. She scratched, licked and pulled his ears, and when she flail-y ter up on him he wouldn't hev looked wuss if half a dozen bars had played with him. I've seen a heap of men walloped, but he was the wallopedest man of the hull lot."

"And how did Mrs. White come out of it?"

"She didn't git a scratch, but I've alius bin sorry about it."

"What?" I asked, as he turned his face away from me. "Befo' that fight she was a mighty humble woman and left all the bossin' to me. Sence then she's—she's—"

"She's not so humble?"

"Jest so. Jest got the idea that she kin wallop me same as she did him, and thar ar days when she's all ready to make a try at it. Spiles a woman to git some noshuns in her head."

"And an hour arter we got home that evening I overheard her sayin' to him:
 "Now, Zeb White, yo' git me up a heap of frowood by the back doah tomorrow or take the consequences. If you don't I'll make yo' back ache fur a hull month to cum!"

FELINE WHISKERS.

Delicate Nerve Signals That Guide the Lion in the Jungle.

Because a cat can go about so safely and rapidly in the dark without injury to himself or without running into things nearly every one believes it is due entirely to the fact that he sees with his eyes in the dark.

That a cat can see to a certain extent in the dark is quite true, but it is doubtful if he could go about so rapidly in total darkness were it not for his long whiskers. Note a cat's whiskers and you will see they are always us-long, generally longer, as his head is wide, and a cat's head is as wide as his body.

These delicate hairs that project from the muzzle of the cat family are wonderful mechanisms. Each one grows from a follicle or gland nerved to the utmost sensibility. Its slightest contact with any obstacle is instantly felt by the animal, though the hair itself may be tough and insensible.

Consider the lion stealing through the jungle at night in search of prey when the least stir of a twig gives alarm. The lion's whiskers indicate through the thicket nerves any object that may be in his path. A touch stops him short before pushing through some close thicket where the rustling leaves and boughs would betray his presence. Wherever his head may be thrust without a warning from the vibrissa there his body may pass noiselessly. It is the aid given him by his whiskers, in conjunction with the soft cushions of his feet that enables him to proceed as silently as the snake.—

ARABIA LIKES LOCUSTS.

Not Only the Natives but Everything Animal Eats Them.

Locust are today eaten in Arabia pretty much as they were in Biblical times. Foreigners as well as natives declare that they are really an excellent article of diet. They are best boiled.

The long or "hopping" legs must be pulled off and the locust held by a wing and dipped into salt before it is eaten. As to flavor, the insect is said to taste like green peas.

The red locust is more palatable than the green kind. Some say that the female is red and the male green, but others contend that all are green at first, whatever the sex.

Locusts must be caught in the morning, for then they are benumbed by the cold and their wings are damp with the dew, so that they cannot fly.
 They may be found in Arabia clustered in hundreds under the desert hush-es, and they can be literally shoveled into a bag or basket.

Later the sun dries their wings and it is hard to catch them. When in flight they resemble what we call May flies. They fly sideways, drifting, as it were, before the wind.

They devour everything vegetable and are devoured by everything animal—desert larks and buzzards, ravens, hawks and buzzards like them. The camels munch them in with their food.
 The greyhounds run snapping after them all day long and eat as many as they catch. The Bedouins often give them to their horses.—Youth's Companion.

Made For Fat Men.

One of the narrow arches in the gallery of the chapel at Columbia university is not exactly symmetrical, although the defect is not noticeable to the casual observer. The reason for this widening of the arch after its original construction had rise in a somewhat humorous occurrence. One of the early visitors was a remarkably fat man, who found himself wedged into the arch when he tried to squeeze through and was extricated with some difficulty. The builders, recognizing the possibility of other fat people being numbered among the future visitors, decided to widen the arch, sacrificing symmetry and harmony to LIGHT WITHOUT HEAT.

Science Hopes to Produce It by the Aid of Chemistry.

Cold light, produced by chemicals, somewhat in imitation of the firefly, is not an abandoned failure, but can be looked forward to hopefully because of recent progress, according to Professor Wilder D. Bancroft of Cornell. In incandescent lamps, such as ordinary electric light bulbs or gas mantle lights, the greatest amount of light is accompanied by the greatest amount of heat, and this method of getting light is approaching its greatest possible efficiency, he believes. Thus the most likely way of getting better light is to tackle the problem from the other end and try to get cold light from chemicals, which is what the firefly does.

A vast amount of information is piling up now on the combinations of chemicals that will give light when excited by other light or heat, for instance, and from this information Professor Bancroft has come to the conclusion that, once it is known exactly what reactions take place in these solutions, it will be possible theoretically to stimulate these reactions by means other than light or heat and so produce cold light where there is no other light. "Along this line a revolution in lighting will some day take place," he recently declared.—Saturday Evening Post.

Paper Cannon.

To the amazingly long list of articles made of paper there may be added paper cannon, which have been manufactured at the Krupp works in Germany.
 These paper field pieces are for special use of the infantry. Their caliber is a little less than two inches, and the pieces are so light that a soldier can easily carry one. But the resistance is greater than that of a field piece of steel of the same caliber. It is not to be understood that these paper guns are in any way to replace those made of steel. The paper arms are intended merely for uses in situations where the movement of field artillery would be impracticable. Paper artillery on the field of battle seems an extraordinary thing, but it is hardly more so than paper wheels for freight cars on railways appeared when they were first introduced, or, for that matter, than paper winter pants were.—New York Tribune.

Summer at Bay View.

The seasonable Bay View announcements are out and will interest the thousands in search of an ideal vacation place. All winter Bay View has barely a dozen families, but in July and August its population swells to 5,000, and then the young people in their gay costumes, the teachers and delightful people from all over the land through this summer city, amid the graves on Traverse bay. More than 10,000 go there annually. The magnet which draws the people is the Assembly and Summer University, which this year opens on July 5, continuing to August 14. These five weeks are crowded with recreative pleasures and advantages of the finest order. A feature of the Assembly is a series of four great public conferences on supreme issues which are discussed by distinguished leaders. The general, daily programs are filled with famous people, among the names this year being William J. Burns, the great detective, Muriel Schman, Heink and Helen Keller. The university's fame extends far and last season drew students from 14 states. This year a new school is added in library work, conducted by the state of Michigan. Those who desire to know more about this summer place will find it in the Bulletin, from which above facts are drawn. J. M. Hall, Bay View, Michigan, will send it.

ed. But he smiled cynically as he passed the paper to Colonel Todhunter. "You forget, Thors," he said, "that old Eph Tucker is president of the Nineveh National bank. Is he likely to finance our campaign against Steve Yancey?"

Colonel Todhunter laughed. "I ain't forgettin' nothin'," he responded. "And don't you forget that old Eph Tucker was a note shaver long before he was a politician, and he's got note shavin' in his blood bigger'n a mule. He couldn't no more let a good piece of paper get away from his bank than he could fly, and he'd sell have to be mighty scarce before old Eph Tucker does any dyin'."

Nevertheless when Colonel Todhunter presented the Strickland note, endorsed by him and his men, the banker found old Eph Tucker solicitously inquisitive.

"What's it all about, Colonel Todhunter?" the banker asked. "You and Bill Strickland going in together on some business deal? What's the consideration for the note?"

Colonel Todhunter looked old Eph Tucker square in the eyes. "Eph," he replied, "I'm goin' to play my cards face up on the table. Bill Strickland needs money to pay his campaign expenses. That's why I'm endorsin' his note and askin' this bank to discount it."

Old Eph's little eyes narrowed. "And you're gettin' no good out of it yourself?" he asked, studying Colonel Todhunter curiously. "You're lendin' your credit and riskin' your farm just to help Bill Strickland along in politics?"

"That's what I'm doin', Eph," replied Colonel Todhunter. "Then," said the banker, "you're a bigger fool than I took you for. Bill Strickland ain't good for $100 with this bank."

"He's good for any amount with me, Eph," returned Colonel Todhunter, a sudden menace in his tone. "But that ain't the question. Is this note good as it stands now?"

"Bill Strickland don't stand no more show for the nomination than a rabbit," spoke old Eph. "He'll never get his hands on the governor's salary. If that's what you're countin' on, Colonel Todhunter."

"Eph," said Colonel Todhunter, "I'll look out for that end of the business. All I want you to do is to pass on this here note."

"Colonel Todhunter," replied the banker, "the endorsement and the collateral make this note good, and it's a banker's business to buy good paper. We'll discount the note. It's your funeral, not ours."

"That finishes the business then," said Colonel Todhunter. "I ain't worryin' about no funeral. But if you're a countin' on either Bill Strickland or me furnishin' the corpse, Eph, you're goin' to see one of the liveliest corpses you ever seen in all your born days, suh."

The old banker made no reply. Colonel Todhunter was chuckling when he reported to Colonel Strickland. "It's all right, Bill, and you can get back to St. Louis right away," he said. "I got the money from old Eph Tucker. But, went Scott and Maria, it was worse'n pullin' eyeteeth. All the same we got it, and now we'll proceed to lick old Eph with his own money."

But Colonel Todhunter would not have spoken so confidently if he had heard the glowing speech of President Tucker of the Nineveh National bank a moment or two after his own departure from that institution.

"The two hopeless fools!" muttered old Eph Tucker to himself. "I've got 'em both where I want 'em now. We'll ruin Bill Strickland for good and all this time. We'll wipe him off the political map of Missouri. And us, for old Thorton Todhunter, I'll make such a home duck out of him yet that the only Todhunter who can ever live on this farm of his again will have to marry a Tucker to do it—like I'll make Mary Todhunter marry my son Scott before I'm through with her."

CHAPTER VII.

Colonel Todhunter Cuts a Wide Swath in Missouri's Metropolis.

TO Colonel Todhunter, a countryman born and bred and of an innate hostility of spirit that was an essential part of his being, contact with the throbbing life of a big city was so rare and for so picturesque a thing that he felt that it never failed to emphasize his type. He stalked into the long St. Louis headquarters of the Hon. William J. Strickland on the parlor floor of the Laclede hotel, the living embodiment of that political figure down to the amused metropolitan imagination, "the delegate from the rural districts."

It was a brave and honest face that showed itself in Colonel Bill Strickland's private office, but somewhat dimmed at thought of an impending ordeal.

"I'll just be eternally whipsawed if you ain't n-tryin' to make a round peg fit into a square hole, Bill!" he protested earnestly, something like awe of his surroundings stamped upon his sunburned features. "I'm willin' to do most anything in the world for you, and you know it. But when you turn me loose in a big town like this and expect me to behave like anything more'n a wild eyed plow horse with his tail full of cockleburrs, I'll be everlastin'ly condemnin' if you ain't makin' a mighty serious mistake, suh!"

"Nonsense, Thors!" laughed Colonel Strickland. "I'm countin' on you for some St. Louis speeches that'll be worth their weight in gold, my friend. We need you here, sir—a man that talks old fashioned American Democracy straight from the shoulder. City politicians have forgotten what the real Democratic doctrine is, Thors, and we've got to revive it in the people's hearts if we expect 'em to vote right. That's why I want you to help me open my St. Louis campaign. You've got to do it, Thors!"

Colonel Todhunter gazed at his friend pensively. "Bill," he said, "I'm agoin' to do it, as you well know. I'd strip the shirt off my back and head a persecution wavin' it for a Strickland banner if you asked me to, whether I thought it was the best thing to do or not the circumstances or not. But I did you remember, Bill, that I warned you in time. I'll be your fault if you have occasion to regret havin' brought me in from the pasture and stacked me up against these here lung lashed city thoroughbreds, suh!"

"I'll take the chances, old fellow," said the candidate, his eyes twinkling. "You just obligate me now for old friendship's sake and I'll be responsible for everything that happens after ward. I ain't the least bit afraid."

"I'll eat my hat if I don't wish I could say the same, suh," ejaculated Colonel Todhunter, a vehement pause in his tone. "I'm skeered to the marrow, suh, because I'm out of my fallin' sick and up against a proposition that I don't know any more about in a long knows about a holiday, suh. And you're agoin' to discover, suh, before we get through with this place of foolishness that I had mighty good reasons for bein' skeered too."

"Shucks, you old warhorse!" laughed Colonel Bill Strickland. "Once you get into the fight you'll warm up like a two-year-old and show these St. Louis folks what a real Missouri Democrat is. You're going to make the hit of your life, sir!"

"Maybe I am and maybe I ain't, Bill Strickland," quoth Colonel Todhunter moodily. "But all I ask at the finish is that you'll remember I warn't no man that made the prediction, suh. I'm a natural born optimist, suh, but that don't necessarily mean that I'm a natural born jackass at all times and under all circumstances and on all subjects, as some folks seem to think, suh!"

And in this frame of mind Colonel Todhunter returned into the general headquarters offices and was introduced to his Nineveh friend's St. Louis backers and campaign staff.

A quiet young newspaper man who happened to be drifting through the rooms seemed instantly impressed by Colonel Todhunter's picturesque personality. He studied the colonel intently, a growing appreciation in his thoughtful and intently humorous eyes.

After exchanging a few words with this new addition to the Strickland forces the journalist went into one of the private telephone booths at the end of the reception room and called up his paper. Then he came back to Colonel Todhunter, engaging him in conversation. A few minutes later a second man casually appeared and unobtrusively stationed himself where he had a good front view of the colonel, who was being deftly led into political dissertation by his new acquaintance.

Colonel Bill Strickland, passing through the main room at one moment, saw the two with their heads together. Something like a gleam of laughter leaped into his eyes, and he nodded, almost imperceptibly, an approving signal to Colonel Todhunter's companion. Then, for no hour or more, the two were left undisturbed.

They eloped pleasantly on many topics. The colonel himself was led to discuss the political situation in Missouri, the district five types party leaders in the country districts, his own personal views and autobiographical reminiscences of past campaigns in the state, his quaint valuation of Democracy's great historic figures. He was in reality being trapped into a self-revelation. Behind his talk, unassuming and shuffling though its unsuspecting frankness and utter naturalness, appeared the childlike and simple soul of the speaker, presented with absolute unreserve. The colonel's companion, who was the most appreciative of listeners, and as he listened a faint of whimsical regard deepened in his eyes.

"But I'm a-takin' up a heap of your time, suh!" exclaimed the colonel finally. "I reckon you city newspaper men have to trot around after news all your tomorn's mornin' out of your mouth a yard long. You mustn't let me keep you from other things, suh."

"Not at all, Colonel Todhunter," came the quick response. "It's been well worth while, sir. I intend asking some of your talk, if you have no objection, so you're really helping me out, you know."

The colonel looked at his companion playfully. "You're wastin' your powder, young man. I can talk by the hour, but what I say ain't got no more business bein' printed in a great city newspaper 'n a whiff of wind a-mistlin' the dry leaves in the woods, suh. You better be mighty careful, tryin' to make somethin' worth while out of them there observations of mine. Your folks at the paper'll think you're a crackbrack talk on Missouri politics, and I'm very much obliged to you, colonel."

"You're mighty welcome," replied Colonel Todhunter, zealous but doubtful. "I'll be shot full of holes if I see how you're agoin' to write a piece from what I've been sayin', suh."

"What in blue blazes and suh!" he asked. "The one with that plumed in his hand, squintin' at me every two seconds and then jabbin' down somethin' with his pencil? That's the one, colonel. He's a regular specimen of the kind you're talkin' about, suh!"

The young newspaper man shook with laughter. "Colonel," he said, his humorous lips twitching, "don't worry about that man. He's perfectly harmless. I know him. He's got a bug on political celebrities, sir. It's a case of bats in his belfry on that one subject. He goes around recording his impressions at close range during every campaign. Just the way you see him now. Most remarkable character, colonel. I've known him for a long time."

"Well, suh," replied Colonel Todhunter, "I'll be eternally condemnin' if he ain't had a terrible look about me, then. He's been jabbin' that there pencil of his'n up and down for the last twenty minutes or so worse'n a little girl playin' thimble behind her jocosely durin' schoolin', suh!"

The newspaper man when tears of laughter from his eyes—"I'll take him fallen just the way you see him now, away now, colonel," he said at last, rising. "I've got to go back to the city, and it always tickles him to talk so solemnly about his impressions. I expect he'll have a lot to say about you, s'g."

"Well, you keep it dark, suh, if he does," replied Colonel Todhunter. "I got enough to stand up under here in St. Louis without no comments from such an amiable curious specimen of humanity as that, suh!"

And at this the newspaper man fairly exploded. He was still shaking with laughter when he joined the mysterious stranger. The latter promptly pocketed his pencil, stuck his bit of charcoal under his arm, and then tottered the two departed.

"It's this here crazy-like city life that makes such weeks as that poor simple Simon," muttered the colonel. "Lead, it willin' to live it, let none pay such a price as that for it. But it takes all sorts of people to make a world. I'll just be jim swizzled if it don't, suh!"

The next afternoon when Colonel Todhunter's eyes fell on the front page of the leading independent Democratic paper of St. Louis he fairly gasped with horror. Then followed an almost tragic pause as he absorbed the full meaning of what had so suddenly stricken him with dismay. The next moment he handed the newspaper to Colonel Strickland.

"What did I tell you, Bill?" he groaned. "I'm agoin' back to Nineveh just as fast as the good Lord'll let me, suh!"

Colonel Strickland's gaze rested upon the newspaper page. He saw Colonel Todhunter's name boldly typed in the glaring headline that extended across three columns. A full length "character cartoon" of the colonel surrounded by "thunder wall" impressions of his face and bodily pose at various interesting moments of his talk of the preceding day surrounded the larger portrait.

Colonel Strickland began a reading of the article. A smile crept upon his face. Slowly his eyes went down the printed page. The smile broadened. Soon it became a chuckle. Later, absorbed in the reading, the candidate's shoulders shook as he read. Finally, with one big fist pinning the newspaper to the table in front of him, Colonel Bill Strickland bowed back in his chair and roared a laugh.

"Lord have mercy on us, Thors!" he gasped. "It's the best and truest thing I ever saw in my life. They've got you finished off to the queen's taste."

"To be continued next week."

SEND PRODUCE C. O. D.

New Feature Added to Parcel Post of Great Convenience.

Beginning July first, articles can be sent by parcel post C. O. D. up to the value of $100, by the additional payment of ten cents, which will make it very convenient for the merchant and for the patron who wish to send for things and do not know how much money to send. Another convenience has been supplied by the post-office department for the parcel post matters. Each one of the rural carriers will be supplied with a pair of scales that weigh up to twenty pounds, and each carrier has a zone book and map so that patrons can be told just the amount of postage that is necessary. In the other way, the carrier had to bring the package to the office, weigh it, put on the postage, keep track of the amount collected it the next time he passed that person's box, and then many times they would not be anywhere near it, as some of these boxes are several rods from the house.

Golden Lad of Ingleside

XVI.—The Babcock Milk Test.

By LAURA ROSE,

Demonstrator and Lecturer in Dairying at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

(Copyright, 1911, by A. C. McCutcheon & Co.)

THE Babcock tester reveals the profitable and unprofitable cows. It condenses or praises the work of the separator. It reveals the loss of fat in whey and buttermilk, and it puts a check on dishonesty by having milk and cream sold on the value of their fat content. No dairyman should feel his equipment complete without one. It is simple, quick and cheap. A four bottle Babcock tester, complete, can be had for $5 or $6.

Milk testing is not a complicated or tedious thing to do. A careful boy or girl fourteen or fifteen years old can soon learn to make correct tests. There is no better way of getting the children interested in the cows.

The Babcock test is a simple, quick, cheap and reliable test for determining the percentage of fat in milk, cream, etc.

General Rules for Making the Test.
All the glassware must be perfectly clean. Wash it in a strong solution of soda and rinse it well afterward.

Have a representative sample of the milk or cream to be tested. It must be from the entire milk, well mixed. Samples of cream, skim milk, buttermilk and whey must be taken from the bulk after being well stirred from the bottom to the top. At the time of making the test the sample should be poured from one vessel to another, so as to obtain a thorough and even mixture. It should be at a temperature of between 59 and 70 degrees.

A 17.6 cubic centimeter pipette is used to take the measure of milk required. Insert the small end in the milk and the other end in the mouth, draw up the air and the milk rises in the tube. When the pipette is filled with milk, quickly place the index finger of the right hand over the top of the pipette. Hold the pipette on a level with the eye and slowly allow the pressure of the finger. The milk will run out in proportion to the air admitted. When the milk exactly reaches the line indicating the proper amount for a test quickly press down the finger.

Every Test Must Be Accurate.
A test is of little or no value unless it is in every way accurate.

Place the point of the pipette in the neck of the bottle, but do not shove it in tightly; remove the finger from the end, and the milk runs into the bottle. Blow to get the last drop.

Pour into the acid measure 17.5 cubic centimeters of commercial sulphuric acid with a specific gravity of 1.82. When adding it to the milk hold the test bottle on a slant, so as to allow the acid to run down the neck and under the milk and not fall directly on top of it.

By giving the bottle a gentle rotary motion thoroughly mix the acid and the milk. Never point the neck of the bottle toward your own face or in the direction of any one else. The contents of the bottle get very hot by the action of the acid. The acid dissolves all the constituents of the milk except the fat, which it heats and liberates. Sulphuric acid is dangerous. It eats holes in cloth and burns the skin. If it gets on the hands or clothes, immediately wash with water. Ammonia checks its action on cloth or leather and restores the color. The acid must be kept in glass or stone jars or bottles and always kept corked.

When each sample to be tested is taken as described put the bottles in the machine, placing them so as to maintain the balance and whirl for four or five minutes. Stop the machine and add sufficient hot water at a temperature of 110 degrees to that the fat into the marked scale space on the neck of the bottle. Rotate the machine again for two minutes, then place the bottles in water at about 140 degrees, having the water reach as high as the top of the fat in the neck, and read the fat column when at that temperature.

It is well to use a pair of dividers or compasses for measuring the fat. The points of the dividers should be placed at the extreme upper and lower limits of the fat column. Then carefully place the one point of the dividers at the zero mark of the scale. The division at which the other point touches will show the percentage of fat in the sample tested.

The small divisions of the scale read two-tenths of 1 per cent, the large divisions equal 1 per cent on the whole.

Therefore if the fat covers three large spaces, and four small ones the milk tested contains three and eight-tenths pounds of fat per 100 pounds of milk or is said to have 3.8

Testing Cream.

Cream test bottles are graduated to read as high as 30, 40 or 50 per cent fat and are made with a large neck.

Use an eighteen cubic centimeter pipette for measuring the cream. Blase the pipette with a little water to get out the full complement of cream. After mixing the cream and add add the hot water before reading.

Each division of the scale reads one-half or 1 per cent, according to the marking.

The proper amount of cream or milk, etc., for a test is eighteen grams.

Owing to the small percentage of fat in skim milk, buttermilk and whey, to get accurate tests double necked test bottles should be used.

The amount is taken in a 17.6 cubic centimeter pipette and tested in the usual way. The milk has to be delivered slowly into the larger neck or it bubbles out. The scale on the neck reads to one-hundredth of 1 per cent.

One large division reads five hundredths or .05 per cent fat.

It is not always convenient nor is it necessary to test daily when a yearly record is being kept of a herd or when milk or cream is delivered at a factory.

We will suppose a herd test is to be kept. There should be a flat bottle with a long tight fitting cork for each cow.

The cow's name or number should be plainly written on a label which is gummed well on the bottle, then given two coats of shellac so as not to have the label wash off.

The bottles should be placed on a convenient shelf in the milk room separated from the stable. Hanging near should be a pair of spring scales set to record the net weight of milk. The milk pails should be all the same weight.

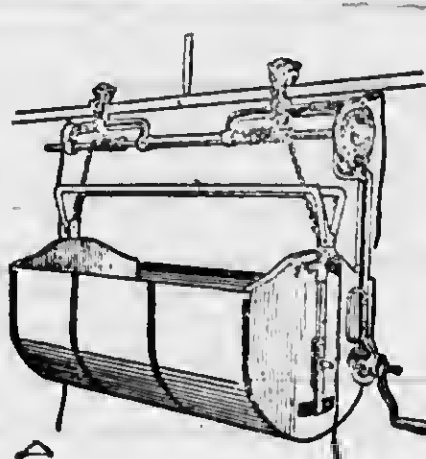

On a board by the shelf should be tacked a record sheet to mark the pounds of milk at each milking.

To keep the milk from curdling in the test bottles a preservative is necessary. The one commonly used is seven parts bichromate of potash to one part of corrosive sublimate, but three parts of the former to one of the latter give better results. This is poisonous, but as it turns the milk a decided yellow no one is apt to drink it.

Put about as much of this powder as can be lifted on a ten cent piece into each bottle. This amount of preservative will keep the sample good from two to four weeks, according to the heat of the weather. If very warm use more. Avoid too much, as it spoils the test, giving burnt readings. Preservative tablets may be procured and are more convenient.

The sample is taken night and morning by means of a long handled one-ounce dipper, and precaution must be taken to pour the milk so measured into the proper bottle.

When the test is only made fortnightly or monthly, the samples must be taken for two or three days, as the fat content may vary.

THE LITTER CARRIER, A LABOR SAVING CONVENIENCE.

To prepare composite samples for testing set the bottles in water at 110 degrees to melt any cream on the sides of the bottles. Mix well by pouring from one vessel to another. Take the samples as usual, but cool to about 60 degrees before adding the acid. Use slightly less acid than for ordinary testing.

To Find the Pounds of Fat.
To find the pounds of fat produced during the period the test has covered multiply the test by the pounds of milk given and divide by 100.

To find the proximate number of pounds of butter divide the total pounds of fat by six and add the result to the pounds of fat, and it will equal the pounds of butter.

Total lbs. milk given during month... 500 x 2.5
Average milk test during month... 34.2
Total lbs. fat... 34.2

One-sixth of total lbs. fat... 5.7

Calculated yield of butter... 39.9 lbs.

The lactometer is an instrument to determine the specific gravity of milk. The term specific gravity means the weight of a solid or liquid compared with an equal volume of water at 60 degrees F. Average whole milk has a specific gravity of 1.032, which indicates that milk is .032 heavier than water.

Milk inspectors rely on the lactometer to detect whether milk has been watered or skimmed or both.

In butter and even to a greater extent in cheese making the necessity for knowing the exact amount of acid at the different stages of manufacture has introduced the simple, quick, cheap method known as the alkaline test, which gives the percentage of acid present in the sample tested.

This Hart caseli tester is used for determining the caseli content of milk, and when it is more generally known and used is likely to prove valuable to cheesemakers.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

FISH IN SEASON.

For Friday's dinner there are many different fish to select from. Salmon, trout, halibut, bluefish, haddock, sea bass and mackerel are all available.

To cook fish, whether fresh or salt, take them while raw and, holding the headless fish in the left hand, split down the back. With the right thumb carefully push the meat from the flesh side of the backbone. Then gently force the thumb between the backbone and the skin of the fish from head to tail. Now pull sideways, and the ribs adhering to the backbone will come out with it.

All the remaining bones can be removed by catching them between the thumb and the sharp blade of a knife.

Baked Fish.
Halibut in Cream.—Take three pounds of halibut boiled with plenty of salt, remove the skin, bones and flake. Boil one bunch of parsley and one large onion in a little water to extract flavor. Take out and thicken with three tablespoonfuls of flour previously beaten smooth with a little milk. Then add to it one quart of rich milk and one-half cupful of butter. Put fish and sauce alternately in a buttered pan, having sauce on top. Cover with cracker crumbs and bake until brown.

Well Seasoned Fish.
Boiled Salmon Steak.—Take a pint of broth or water and boil with a small bunch of celery, half a teaspoonful of salt, quarter teaspoonful of pepper and a tablespoonful of vinegar. Cut the salmon steaks in suitable pieces and put the fragments and bones in the boiling liquid. Place the salmon in a clean saucpan and strain the seasoned broth over it. Cover and let boil briskly for ten minutes. Serve in a deep dish with the liquor instead of sauce. The full flavor and the richness of the fish are preserved in this dish.

A Delicious Food.
Grilled Trout.—Take fresh trout, clean and score it diagonally three or four times on either side, brush over with oil or melted butter and broil over a clear fire, placing the trout on oiled steaks on the grilliron, as this prevents the skin of the fish being torn in the turning.

Serve with bearnaise sauce, which is made as follows: Stir together over the fire the yolks of five eggs, an ounce of butter and a dash of salt and freshly ground black pepper. As soon as the butter is melted and the eggs begin to thicken lift the pan off the fire and stir in another ounce of butter; then return it to the fire to dissolve the butter and repeat this twice more, stirring the butter well in off the fire then returning the pan to fire to melt the butter.

TRYING TO "LIFT THAT CUP."
It Has Cost British Yachtmen So Far About a Million Pounds.

The persistence of Sir Thomas Lipton in his endeavor to "lift that cup" from the New York Yacht Club certainly merits success. His Shamrock I. was beaten by the Columbia in 1892.

Shamrock II. by the Columbia in 1901 and Shamrock III. by the Reliance in 1904. He has had another Shamrock since, but he refused to call it Shamrock IV., reserving that title for another challenger. If he should have one built.

His three past attempts to win the cup have cost him about $100,000 for yachts alone (Shamrocks I. and II. $200,000 each and Shamrock III. $35,000), and altogether he has spent on the efforts nearly $400,000. Since the Americans won the cup in the race around the Isle of Wight in 1851 twelve attempts have been made to recover it, at a total cost of about $1,000,000. The cup itself is worth barely $50.

Sir Thomas Lipton had great success during the yachting season last year. Out of thirty races in home waters in which his Shamrock took part he won twenty-three firsts, and at the international race at Kiel he won six races out of eight.

Sir Thomas is probably the greatest clubman in the world, for he is honor member of nearly a hundred clubs in America alone, besides a very great many in Great Britain. Yachting by no means claims all his sporting attention. In latter years he has taken up motor ing. He likes gardening, too. Cricket, golf, tennis and bowls also come with in his purview, but he is not a great theatergoer.—London Spare Moments.

POMONA GRANGE MEETING

Many Interesting Subjects Discussed at Meeting Held Thursday.

Charlevoix Pomona grange met with Marion Center grange June 19, with a very good attendance. E. H. Clark, the new lecturer, had a very interesting program prepared.

In the forenoon C. H. Bramble, secretary of the Grange Fire Insurance company, gave an interesting talk on fire insurance. R. W. Padock gave an instructive talk on "Sanitation on a Dairy Farm." The different breeds of cattle were discussed by the following members: Holsteins, William Withers; Short-horns, William Mears; Jerseys, Walter Black, and Ayrshires, E. S. Stacks.

Following this, John Knudsen gave a short talk on "The Beauties of Farm Life."

In the evening E. S. Stacks and C. H. Bramble each gave addresses on "Alfalfa" and "Farm Credits," which was greatly enjoyed by those present.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

Farm Barn and Contents of Joseph Sprink Destroyed by Fire.

Last Thursday morning about 4 o'clock, the barn of Joseph Sprink, on the Norwood road south west of Charlevoix, was struck by lightning and totally destroyed with nearly all of its contents.

A heavy rain storm was in progress at the time and within four minutes from the time the barn was struck, it was a mass of flames. Two head of cattle, some implements, hay, grain and small tools were destroyed. Three horses that were in the barn at the time were gotten out safely.

The fire is a severe financial loss to Mr. Sprink, his loss practically stopped him from farm operations for a short time. The total loss was about $1,000, with a small amount of insurance.

MAKE TRIP OVER PIKE

Prosperity Special Promises to be a Big Feature, Says DeKleine.

Trip Begins With a Banquet at St. Joseph Monday Evening July 7—Special Programs.

"Not only is the West-Michigan Pike an assured fact but the prosperity special which is to go over the pike the second week in July promises to be a big feature," says Dr. William DeKleine of Grand Haven, the president of the Pike association.

The inspection trip begins with a banquet at St. Joseph Monday evening, July 7. The following morning we will start on the northward journey, reaching Muskegon for Tuesday night; Manistee for Wednesday night, and Traverse City for Thursday night. Friday morning we begin the final dash into Antrim, Charlevoix and Emmet counties, and expect to get back to Manistee by Saturday night. On the trip north from Manistee to Traverse City we will go by the way of Arcadia, Frankfort, Empire, Glen Haven, Leland, Northport, Omena and Suttons Bay. This will take us through the cherry section just as the cherries begin to ripen. This in itself will be a big treat.

Programs calculated to stimulate road improvement campaigns will be carried out at the evening meetings at Muskegon, Manistee and Traverse City. It will be a mistake for anybody with an auto not to travel with the procession for one or more days. Detailed schedules will be sent to the newspapers in the counties through which the special goes that everybody may participate in the special, at least to the extent of seeing the parade pass by.

The merchants' associations also very generally advocate that the use of a distinctive stamp for parcel post packages be dispensed with, and that the ordinary stamp be used. It is pointed out that many business houses receive remittances in postage stamps, for the reason that it is the most convenient method of small remittances now provided by the government.

These stamps, it is pointed out, usually far exceed the requirements of the receiving houses for ordinary postal purpose, and it would be a distinct advantage, the merchants' associations say, if these stamps could be used on parcels. The point is also urged that the use of ordinary stamps would be of great benefit to the masses of people who are not in business and who have occasion from time to time to ship packages by parcel post.

The merchants' associations continue to complain about the present method of transporting fragile goods in parcel post. It is asserted that the damage to goods of this character is so great that many merchants who hope to make large use of the parcel post have been greatly discouraged in the use of this system of transportation and have in a good many instances abandoned it. The suggestion is made that the postoffice department install some system for appropriate containers for fragile goods.

The postmaster general is giving serious thought to the suggestions. It is altogether likely that he will shortly make some important changes in the rules and regulations governing the administration of the service, but it is not at all certain that he will dispense with the zone system. The department officials seem to believe that this system is working very well. Generally speaking the people of the country seem to be fairly well satisfied with the system as it is now administered, but the postmaster general says that if he can make it more useful to the merchants he will be glad to do it.

SCHEDULE FOR GOOD ROAD TOUR

Dr. DeKleine of Grand Haven Gives Plan for West Shore Trip.

GOV. FERRIS TO MAKE TRIP

Also Lieutenant Governor Ross and Good Roads H. S. Earle.

Will Arrive in Charlevoix for Dinner on July 11 and on the Same Evening Will Hold Mass Meeting.

Dr. William DeKleine, president of the West Michigan Pike association, today announced the official program of the six-day auto tour from St. Joseph along the coast of Lake Michigan as far north as Pellston, beginning Monday evening, July 7, with a banquet at St. Joseph and ending Saturday, July 12, at Manistee.

Gov. Ferris has accepted an invitation to make the entire trip, contingent only upon the condition of Mrs. Ferris, who has been ill for several months. Lieut. John Q. Ross of Muskegon has likewise agreed to join the trip as early as possible. These two will be reinforced by the most prominent good roads men in the state, including Horatio S. Earle of Detroit, Philip Colegrove of Hastings, William Bryant of Kalamazoo, and Dr. DeKleine.

John I. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development bureau, an active member of the pike association, will also be a member of the party. William Thompson of Battle Creek, a newspaper publisher, will donate two automobiles to the enterprise and will feed all comers at his summer home in Leland when the tourists stop there on the afternoon of July 10.

James E. Merritt, who owns the big Nellie Whitney fruit farm near Manistee; Frank Hamilton of Traverse City, D. H. Day of Glen Haven, president of the Western Michigan Development bureau; John H. Moore of Muskegon, Richard Hoffman of Manistee, secretary and treasurer of the Pike association, and I. W. Allen of St. Joseph will also be numbered among the tourists. These men are all members of the Pike association executive committee.

In addition, an unknown number of autoists who are desirous of touring through one of the most beautiful sections of Michigan will join. "Any autoist is welcome to take part in the tour," said Dr. DeKleine. "The longer the parade the better the impression we'll make in the campaign work and the more fun there'll be for everybody."

Besides the men who will make the through trip, automobile and good roads enthusiasts in many of the towns through which the tour is scheduled to pass will stick with the parade for a day or more. It is not unlikely, Dr. DeKleine says, that fifty or a hundred autos may be in the caravan over some stretches of the tour.

Pleasure and work will be combined. There will not be so much speechmaking and good roads boosting that the pleasures of touring will be curtailed nor will there be so much touring that the mechanics will have to scotch over the ground without giving the tourists ample opportunity to absorb the charms of the land and marine views along the route.

Back of the tour is the Chicago to Mackinaw trunk line highway. The good roadsters will fire their best ammunition at the short and long meetings on the trip, telling farmers and business men why they should work for the highway.

Below we publish the official schedule from the time of leaving Traverse City:

Friday, July 11—Leave Traverse City 7 a. m., arrive Rapid City 8:30, leave 8:45; arrive Bellaire 9:45 a. m., leave 10:15; arrive Central Lake 10:30 a. m., leave 10:45; arrive Ellsworth 11 a. m., leave 11:15; arrive Charlevoix 12; dinner; leave Charlevoix 12:45 p. m.; arrive Petoskey 1:45 p. m., leave 2; train splits at Petoskey, one section going to Pellston, the other to Harbor Springs; arrive Harbor Springs 3 p. m., leave 3:15; arrive Pellston 2:45 p. m., leave 3;

trains unite at Petoskey about 4:30; supper and meeting at Petoskey; leave Petoskey 6:30 p. m.; arrive Charlevoix 7:30; evening meeting and night stop.

Saturday, July 12.—Leave Charlevoix 7 a. m., arrive Elk Rapids 9:30 a. m., leave 10; arrive Traverse City 11 a. m.; dinner; leave Traverse City 12; arrive Interlochen 1 p. m., leave 1:15; arrive Honor 2:15 p. m., leave 2:45; arrive Benah 3:15 p. m., leave 3:45; arrive Benzonia 4 p. m., leave 4:45; arrive Bear Lake 5:30 p. m.; supper; leave Bear Lake 6:30; arrive Manistee 8 p. m.

It is to be hoped that the tourists will be met on the road by a large number of our local autoists and given the glad hand of welcome.

THEATRICAL

Manager Loskot of the Charlevoix theatre has secured the services of Miss Stricklin as pianist at this popular play house. Miss Stricklin is without exception the best pianist that has ever played in theatres in this part of the state, and in future patrons of this play house may look forward to a great musical treat in addition to the fine pictures always seen at this theatre.

As a special feature for next Saturday night Mr. Loskot will show the Vitagraph two reel production "Reincarnation of Karmi" which is claimed to be one of the best pictures ever produced by the Vitagraph company.

MAKES PLANS FOR "Y" CAMP

Outline Days Program For Boys While on Their Vacation.

Secretary Ball Making Preparations For Big Event—Water Supply Taken Care of.

Last week, A. Bruce Ball, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., made a trip to Beaver Island and completed arrangements for the Boy's camp which will open on July 15th. The arrangements for driving the well, building the cook house, supplying the butter and eggs and milk and for the trip among the other islands are completed and nothing seems to stand in the way of a jolly and profitable outing. The campers will have at their disposal a plot of ground thirty-five acres in extent with a frontage on Lake Michigan of a quarter of a mile and boating privileges on Font Lake.

It should be remembered by those interested that no enrollments received after July first will be considered and that the sooner the enrollments are in the more satisfactory will the arrangements be for the boys when they arrive at camp.

A day's program at camp usually takes the following form:

6:30 a. m., reveille, morning dip and setting up exercises.
7:00 a. m., breakfast.
7:30 a. m., camp duties, blankets out for an airing.
8:00 a. m., morning inspection.
8:30 to 11:00, forenoon sports.
11:00 a. m., swimming period.
12:00 p. m., dinner.
12:30 to 1:30 p. m., rest hour.
1:30, afternoon sports.
3:30 p. m., swimming instruction.
4:00 p. m., swimming period.
5:30 p. m., evening inspection.
6:00 p. m., supper.
6:30 p. m., bible study.
7:00 p. m., group games.
8:00 p. m., camp fire, inspirational talks and entertainments.
9:00 p. m., taps.

CRAZED BY HEAT

Charlevoix Pioneer Settler Declared Insane by Probate Court.

John Johncheck, a pioneer settler of Charlevoix county and who for many years lived on a farm near Hortons Bay, was adjudged insane in the probate court Tuesday.

For several days the condition of Mr. Johncheck had been a source of alarm to the members of his family, but up to Monday no serious outbreak had taken place.

During the extreme heat on Monday, Mr. Johncheck's mind became entirely unbalanced. He locked the doors of his home, shut the windows and built a raging fire in the stove. Officers were called and after a time he was quieted.

Tuesday afternoon he was brought before Judge of Probate Correll and adjudged insane. He will be taken to Traverse City for treatment.

P. M. MOTOR CAR HAS ARRIVED

Will Make Four Round Trips Between Charlevoix and Petoskey.

Motor Rated at 250 Horse Power, Has 8-Cylinder Water-Cool Engine—Carries 91 Passengers.

Efforts which local Pere Marquette officials have been making the past year bore fruit last Thursday, when a passenger motor car arrived at Petoskey on its own power, trailing a 3,000 tank of low grade gasoline.

The car will be used on the runs between Petoskey, Charlevoix and Belvedere this summer, which began Sunday. The motor car will make four round trips each day, and these, with the three trips of through trains, will give seven each way per day.

The motor is rated at 250 horse power, having an eight-cylinder, water-cool engine. It starts with compressed air and is operated by throttles at the right of the engine room. The car will be turned at each end of the journey. It will consume about ninety gallons per day, using half a gallon each mile. The fuel is of low grade, known as "spirits."

There is nothing "dinky" about this motor car. It seats ninety-one passengers, twenty-five of them in a separate smoking compartment. The car is practically new, having been used only since April, at Port Hope and the Thumb district. It is a pretty piece of machinery, being fully as long as a Pullman car.

The motor arrives at Charlevoix each day at 10:35 a. m., 12:30, 3:30 and 10:05 p. m.

DEVOWE WILL SPEAK

Superintendent of Charlevoix Schools to Address Men's Bible Class Sunday.

The hour of meeting of the Men's class has been changed to twelve o'clock noon at the same place in the Carnegie library.

Next Sunday it is expected that Superintendent DeVoe will address the class. His topic will be connected with the public schools and an opportunity for discussion of the subject will be given. In order that there may not be unnecessary inconvenience for those wishing to attend, the class will commence promptly on time and endeavor not to run beyond the hour devoted to it. During the summer months, the class will have the privilege of being addressed by a number of the brightest men in the country, so that there is something good in store for those who avail themselves of the privileges the class affords.

KILLED BY LOG

Will Thompson Loses Life While Working Near Chestonia Last Week.

William Thompson of Central Lake was crushed to death on Friday of last week at Camp 6 of the East Jordan Lumber Company.

Mr. Thompson was skidding logs alone near the camp when the accident happened. A big elm top lay across some logs that had not been skidded. He hitched onto it and tried to slide it over, but instead of sliding it rolled and struck him on the left shoulder, breaking his neck and his shoulder bone, and snapping several ribs, some of them piercing his lungs. He was dead when found shortly afterwards.

He leaves a wife and four children to mourn their loss.

Postponed One Week.

Owing to the fact that the boys who are planning on attending the Y. M. C. A. Camp desire to witness the aviation races it has been decided to open camp on the 15th. This arrangement will bring visitors day on the 22nd.

STATE TO HELP

Boosting Department at Lansing Began Operations on July 1.

Beginning July 1, Michigan is to be actively advertised as a good place to live.

A. C. Carton, land commissioner and head of the immigration department will be the official advertising director of the state with $10,000 at his disposal. The first effort of the bureau will be directed towards relieving the labor troubles of the farmers in the state. Foreign laborers who land in New York will be induced to come to Michigan. Here they will be given work on the farms.

Farmers who desire laborers are directed to write to Mr. Carton, informing him how many workers they need, whether male or female and what the work consists of.

The board will also send forth large numbers of circulars describing Michigan lands and urging them upon those who desire to "go back to the soil."

Charlevoix Given Boost.

Monday's Grand Rapids Evening Press devotes an entire page to Charlevoix and her various hotels and industries. Practically every hotel and private boarding house is given a splendid send off. Photographs of the plant of the Charlevoix Rock Product company are shown, and that growing concern is bigly spoken of.

STATE ISSUES PUBLIC WARNING

Urges Effective Muzzling of All Dogs in State at Once.

Reports Show More Cases of Rabies in State Than in Former Years.

A general public warning against hydrophobia (rabies) is in order at this time. Reports from over the state show that there are more than the usual number of cases this season.

While hydrophobia can be communicated by other animals than dogs, yet the dog is the most important animal to consider in relation to this disease.

Effective muzzling of all dogs is the only method to prevent spread of this fatal disease. "All worthless, tramp dogs should be killed; all others should be securely, but humanely, muzzled. The State law (Act 306, P. A. 1909) authorizes township boards of health to establish quarantine and to order all dogs in the township or any part thereof, restrained, confined or muzzled." This law should be taken advantage of now, as conditions over the state warrant it. Village and city ordinances providing for restraining or muzzling dogs should be strictly enforced.

All persons bitten by dogs suspected of being rabid (mad), should be taken immediately to the Pasteur Institute of the State University at Ann Arbor for treatment. This treatment, if taken advantage of, will absolutely safeguard the patient. There has never been a death from hydrophobia among all the patients treated at the University Pasteur Institute.

A dog suspected of having rabies should be securely tied and observed for developments. If for any reason it is necessary to kill the dog he should not be shot in the head as that often renders it impossible to make the necessary laboratory examination to determine whether or not he had rabies. The dog's head should be packed in ice and sent to the Pasteur Institute, Ann Arbor, for examination. No charge is made for such examinations.

Let us have a general muzzling of dogs in Michigan the balance of the summer months and a wholesale doing away with worthless tramp dogs.

R. L. Dixon, Secretary, State Board of Health.

FLYING BOATS HERE JULY 11-12

Greatest Event in the History of Aviation in America.

TWELVE ENTRIES FOR CONTEST

A Sight Which May Never Again Be Witnessed Here.

Contestants are Among the Most Celebrated Air Pilots in Country—Big Crowd Anticipated.

The greatest event in the history of aviation in America, is the endurance contest for flying boats, which is being pulled off in the race from Chicago to Detroit, around the shore of the lakes. Twelve have already entered for the race, and three more are expected. Among the Chicago aviators to enter is Harold McCormick, son-in-law of John D. Rockefeller, who will be a passenger in his own boat. Lieutenant Towers of the U. S. N., who was to captain McCormick's flying machine, was seriously hurt last week in a fall into Chesapeake Bay, when his partner was killed, and another man has been secured to handle the millionaire's boat, unless McCormick decides to do so himself.

Charlevoix has been designated as a night control, and all contestants will land in Round Lake on their arrival from Manistee, where they stop the night of the 10th. From Round Lake the flying boats will have to arise in the air to go to their anchorage on Pine Lake, and then Saturday morning they will have to fly back into Round Lake again and alight, and then make their start for Mackinac from Round Lake, thus giving visitors to Charlevoix an unexampled opportunity to see the boats at close range, and witness their various maneuvers in flying in the air, on the water, and rising and alighting.

The people of Charlevoix have contributed a fund of $1,000 toward the cash prizes for the aviators and to pay incidental expenses, in order to secure this unprecedented attraction for their summer visitors and all the people of northern Michigan, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to come and witness a sight which may never again, at least in many years, be seen in this part of the state. The aviators will begin arriving in Charlevoix at noon of the 11th, and will begin leaving about 10 in the forenoon of the 12th, and being sent off at ten minute intervals, it will be a continuous succession of arriving and departing air boats both on arriving and departing.

The "Flying Boat" is a new departure in aviation. It is a lightly built boat, with the regular planes of an aeroplane, and will fly in the air at a speed of 70 to 80 miles an hour, and will skim over the water at a speed of 55 to 65 miles an hour.

The contestants are among the most celebrated aviators in the country, and not a dozen different makes of machines are represented. The winner will win a $5,000 in cash. Charlevoix is the only stop between Manistee and Mackinac Island.

Charlevoix is to be congratulated on her enterprise in securing this attraction, and thus giving others a chance to witness the greatest of all contests yet pulled off for aviators.

Birthday Party.

Twenty-three little girl friends of Miss Helen Olson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Olson, gathered at home of her grandmother, Mrs. John Kelly, Friday afternoon to help her celebrate her fifth birthday. Suitable presents were left Miss Helen as mementos of the occasion. Games were played and a dainty birthday supper served, after which the little folks returned to their homes, wishing that every day was an occasion for celebrating birthdays.

The guests had not all seen the man when he disappeared, and it was learned later that he was an Impetuous member of a good family, who had accepted pay to show a possible style for the coming season.

Sugar Made From Wood.

Now they're making sugar out of wood. British chemists have found that they can take a ton of sawdust and get a quarter of a ton of sugar out of it. The process consists of putting the sawdust into a closed retort and subjecting it to digestion with a weak solution of sulphurous acid under a pressure of from 90 to 100 pounds to the square inch. Eighty per cent of the sugar thus obtained is fermentable. The product is called "saccharose."—New York World.

Common Council

Council Chambers, June 30, 1913. The common council for the city of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Nichols presiding. Aldermen present, Priest, See, Barney, Cartier, Powers and Shapton. Absent none. Minutes of the last meeting read and approved.

The following letter was read. June 25, 1913. City Clerk, Charlevoix, Michigan.

Sir: In reply to your letter of June 21, 1913, requesting an opinion as to the proper height for bell tower, you are advised that there has been no standard height established; but it is considered that a bell's efficiency increases in proportion to its height from the ground, or water, as the sound waves are deflected downward by the shape of the bell; and if close to the ground these naturally become amplified and reduce their audibility.

It is my opinion that by increasing the height of your bell from thirty to sixty feet you will increase its efficiency.

Respectfully,

Department of Commerce Light-house service.

Lewis M. Stoddard, Inspector.

Moved by Ald. See and seconded by Ald. Priest that C. H. Rader be awarded the contract of building a bell tower on Hose tower and placing the fire bell on the same at his bid of $5000.

Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Priest, See, Barney, Cartier, Powers and Shapton. Nays, none.

The matter of the stand at the city fountain was referred to the license committee with power to act.

Ald. Priest supported by Ald. Cartier moved the adoption of the following resolution.

Resolved that the board of health make such medical rules as may be necessary to cause the proprietor of the Keller Shelling Kiosk to install a toilet for both men and women on the premises of the kiosk, July 1st, 1914, and that the clerk be instructed to call a meeting of the health officer and the board of health at the earliest possible date.

Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Priest and seconded by Ald. Barney that the Street Commissioner be instructed to construct the fence along the gravel pit on Michigan Avenue and present the bill to the city council to be acted upon by the Finance Committee and the same presented to Lee Howard for payment in accordance with a letter now on file in the office of the city attorney.

Motion carried.

Ald. Powers supported by Ald. Cartier moved the adoption of the following resolution. Resolved by the common council of the city of Charlevoix that the portion of a majority of the owners of property, to wit: the owners of property on the west side of Dixon Avenue, between the north Colonel
TODHUNTER
of Missouri

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS

Copyright, 1911, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"I don't know nothin' about the queen's taste, suh," spoke Colonel Tod-hunter grimly, "but I know one thing almighty well. I'm ngoin' to dust that newspaper man's jacket for him the next time he comes in reach o' me.
Great name above, suh, th' ain't no man can handle Colonel Thurs T. Tod-hunter like that and not get it well taken out of his hide, suh."

Agatha Strickland shouted with laughter. "You old fool!" he spu-tered. "That newspaper man knows you better than you know yourself.
It's wonderful, Thurs! He's made a character study of you that's nothing more or less than a miracle, my friend."

It was the truth. Colonel Todhunter had come under the vision of a masterfully gifted newspaper expert in "character values." The young fellow with whom he had chatted so freely and at such ease on the preceding afternoon had temperamentally "absorbed" him body and soul. Then he had gone to his newspaper desk and written a descriptive interview that was sheerly the colonel himself in the flesh. It was a feat of psychological wizardry. The man achieving it seemed to have put aside his own being for the moment and taken on that of Colonel Todhun-ter. As a result of this exercise of the strangest of literary powers Colonel Todhunter himself, the typical figure of a Missouri Democrat of the old school, talked in his proper person, a living, breathing, almost palpable entity, from the printed page.

And the keenly humorous, appreciative and well nigh loving quality that signalized the writer's performance of his task was finely reinforced by the work of the cartoonist. The sketches themselves were lifelike, bringing out the colonel's every salient characteristic in facial expression, bodily pose and gesture.

But this amazing projection of himself in printer's ink on the publicity
"screen" of a newspaper's front page appalled Colonel Todhunter. He shrank from it, shocked, with all a country-man's dismay at sudden prominence before the world.

"It's all right for you, Bill; you can afford to laugh," he said indignantly.
"But I'm the one that's holdin' the bag, suh! It's me that's put on that there infernal circus poster like the wild man o' Borneo, not you. And I'll be shot full o' holes if it ain't me that's agoin' to hold them there two young rascals to an accountin' for it, you mark my words, suh!"

Colonel Strickland wiped the tears from his eyes.
"You're all wrong, Thurs—honest, you are!" he protested. "There ain't a line in that story that don't speak good of you, and what you say there is as sound as a dollar. It's you talking, to the life, old fellow, and you're talking for me, and every word you say helps us more than a column of ordinary newspaper stuff. I wouldn't take $1.
000 for it, right now!"

"I'd sell it for a blamed sight less'n that, suh!" he replied Colonel Todhun-ter. "And didn't I warn you, Thurs?
I told you beforehand that they'd shorley size me up as a country Jake from the very beginnin' and that I'd hugle you all up here in St. Louis, suh? Didn't I say that as sure as I came to these here city headquarters o' your'n I'd play the very old blue blazes and Sam Hill 'fore I got through, suh? Yes, suh—and I'm a-headin' straight back for Nineveh this very day, suh!"

"No, you ain't—not by a jugful!" retorted Colonel Strickland, manfully riving to straighten his face into gravity. "No, sir. You'll speak at the coliseum this very mornin', just as we've planned. Thurs, and I'll tell you another thing. You'll speak to the biggest and most enthusiastic audience the coliseum ever held, or else I don't know the signs of a man's popularity when I see 'em, sir!"

Colonel Bill Strickland prophesied truly. The coliseum was packed to the doors.
"Great Scott and Marla, suh!" said
Colonel Todhunter, describing the scene to Dick Cantrill upon his return home.
"You couldn't ha' wedged a knife blade in between any two men in that there crowd, suh. And the way they cheered and hollered when I was introduced by the chairman of the meetin', suh! Blamed if you wouldn't ha' thought I was the original conrin' ring tailed guyastutus of Calaveras county, suh, and the only one in captivity, suh. I never saw grown men behave that way before in all my life. Dick Cantrill, and it made me better'n blazes. But I kept my shirt on, suh, sayin' to myself that I was there to help old Bill Strickland all I knew how. So I just took it out in talkin' to 'em, like a Dutch uncle, suh, givin' 'em the straight Democratic doctrine and tellin' 'em they needed it blamed bad, too, suh. And I laid the law down to 'em, suh, that I wa'n't me, but old Bill Strickland, they ought to be a-hollerin' for by rights, if they was the good Democrats they per-tended to be, suh. Yes, suh, and then they hollered louder'n ever. But let me tell you one thing, Dick Cantrill, I'll be shot full o' holes if I didn't have 'em every one up on their hind legs a-whoopin' themselves black in the face for old Bill Strickland 'fore I got through with 'em, suh. I tell you, Dick, that there Satan straddled newspaper done its damndest to ruin me, but I got even with it right then and there, suh!"

"Bully for you, colonel!" vociferated Dick Cantrill, his humorous lips tremulous with mirth. "I'd gladly give the last dollar I had in the world if I could have been there and heard you!"
But the colonel's face fell. "Dick," he said, "would you believe it? Them there infernal cartoonists came back at me the next day, worse'n ever, suh. They'd been there at that meetin' and got me in action. I'll be eternally condemned if I ever saw such pictures of a livin' human bein' as they drew of me theu, suh. It was a sin and a shame. What's a man goin' to do these days, Dick Cantrill? I tell you, suh, the present frivolity of the American press is utterly destroyin' the dignity of public life, suh!"

"It is, colonel—it is!" agreed the editor of the Niveveh Weekly Blade con-trarily. And it is to Dick Cantrill's everlasting credit that he held himself in until Colonel Todhunter had stalked away. Then he laughed as he had not laughed in many a day.

"God bless him!" he said to himself chokingly. "He and his speeches have gained five thousand votes for Colonel Strickland in St. Louis just as sure as the sun rises and sets! And they're worth it, too!"

CHAPTER VIII.

Tom Strickland Faces Colonel Tod-hunter in a Sentimental Crisis.

"HONESTLY, Mary," protested Tom Strickland, "it isn't safe for you to drive home alone.
It's all very well to make believe that you're not afraid of a horse, but I know better. Won't you let me see you home?"

The two had met in the lazy quiet of Niveveh's town square, and Tom was quick to see his opportunity. Mary Todhunter laughed at his apprehensive manner.

"How can you keep a straight face when you say that, Tom?" she asked "You know as well as I do that I've driven old Solomon a million times more or less, and that nothing on earth would make him run away."

"You can never tell about these old reliables," said Tom. "Solomon might take it into his head to get frisky any minute. I can see devilment in his eye right now."

He placed an entreating hand on the hugger's side.
"Well, get in, then," conceded Mary, tossing her pretty head. "I reckon I won't have any peace until I let you have your own way."

Tom swung himself into the hugger instantly. "That's a mighty wise conclusion, Mary," he remarked, taking the reins and heading old Solomon toward the shady road that led to Mary's home. "I wish to goodness you'd make up your mind to it as a permanent thing."

Mary flushed mockingly at him. "I reckon you do," she exclaimed. "It's just like you. But there's no danger of it's coming to pass, Mr. Tom Strickland."

They were now well out of the drow-sy town. Old Solomon trotted contentedly along under the leafy foliage that arched his wayward welcome homeward way.

"That's one reason I'd like to see your father elected governor," continued Mary. "Those Jefferson City girls will soon teach you your proper place Tom Strickland, even though you are the governor's son."

"I'm not the governor's son yet Mary," responded Tom, an intentional meekness in his tone. "And even if the time ever comes that I am, Jefferson City will see mighty little of me."

"What do you mean?" asked Mary.
"You'll certainly have to go to the state capital when Colonel and Mrs.
Strickland go, won't you?"

Tom's face took on an injured expression. "I declare, Mary," he spoke.
"you never seem to realize that I'm no longer a boy. Please remember that I'm a grown man now and that I've studied law and been admitted to practice at the Missouri bar."

Laughter gleamed in Mary's eyes.
"Well, Mr. Thomas Strickland, great lawyer that you are," she mocked.
"what then?"

"Why, just this, that I intend to stay right here in Niveveh," announced Tom loftily. "It's all settled now. I'm going to be taken into partnership with my father and old Judge Bolling, and then I can hold my father's practice if he's elected. Anyway, I'm to be a partner Strickland, Bolling & Strickland, that's how the new sign will read!"

Mary laughed outright. "Goodness me!" she cried. "Won't we be a big man then? Oh, Tom, it'll be such fun to hear you make a speech in court:
Ahem—Gentlemen of the jury—"

"Shame on you, Mary Todhunter!" cried Tom, reddening boyishly. "It's just like you, though. You've poked fun at me all your life."

"I haven't either," denied Mary in stare. "I've only laughed at your high and mighty ways now and then,
and you know it."

Tom's angry eyes looked straight to the front.
"You had no right to say that about me," continued Mary. "I've been mighty good to you."

"Up to a certain point, yes," agreed Tom. "But just the minute I get serious about anything you begin laughing at me."

"Why, Tom, I don't do anything of the sort!" protested Mary. "I never dreamed of such a thing! You can try me this very minute and see!"

"All right, I will!" spoke Tom quickly. "Mary, I love you. I want you to promise to be my wife. Won't you?
I've loved you all my life!"

"Tom Strickland!" cried Mary, blushing hotly. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself! You've got no right to say that just because—just because I—I was trying to be good to you!"

"Mary," said Tom sturdily, "if you don't know I've been in love with you all this time you must be blind. And now I've told you, why—well, you've got to give me an answer—and I love you so that I'm afraid to hear it! If it's no—well, it'll break my heart, that's all!"

There was no answer to his pleading
Mary had given him one startled look.
Then her eyes had softened and turned away from him. It seemed to Tom that she was crying.

"Mary," he said humbly, "I didn't mean to say anything to trouble you, but I had to tell you some time, or other. I've loved you a long, long time. Is there any chance for me at all?"

Still there was no answer.
"I reckon I've been the blind one," said Tom sadly. "I reckon you can't care for me the way I care for you.
Yes, Mary, I reckon it's me that's been blind!"

"Yes, Tom," replied Mary Todhunter,
"it's you that have been blind."

Tom bowed his head. "I ought to have seen that you didn't love me," he said. "I ought to have seen it. Then I wouldn't have given you the pain of having to tell me so."

"I'm not going to tell you," said Mary.

"All right, Mary," replied Tom. "I'll take my answer without hurtingling you

"Is there any chance for me at all?"

by making you put it into words. I'm no hog, anyway; I know when I've had enough."

To his amazement Mary burst out laughing. "Of all the funny things to say at such a time!" she cried. Her eyes were full of mischief, yet beautifully tender. "Oh, Tom, indeed you are the blindest of the blind!"

A sudden hope stirred in Tom's soul.
"Mary!" he exclaimed. "You don't mean—"

"I do, Tom," softly replied Mary.
"How could you believe I didn't love you? You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

And Tom Strickland took Mary Tod-hunter in his arms, leaving old Solomon to go his own way unguided.

"I'll tell Mrs. Todhunter and the colonel this very day," he announced a few moments later. "Lord, they'd see it anyway in my face, I'm so proud and happy. I want to know if they think I'm good enough for you."

Mary tossed her head. "They'd better think so!" she retorted indignantly.
"Not good enough, indeed!"

But Tom was near to being panic stricken when they had gained the wide gallery of Mary's home and were confronting her parents.

"Howdy, Tom!" spoke Colonel Tod-hunter. His glance passed from young Strickland to his daughter with just the faintest twinkle of amusement in his gray blue eyes.

Tom Strickland had taken Mrs. Todhunter's hand. "Howdy, Mrs. Todhun-ter—howdy, colonel," he said, his face an open book of confession. "I—I—well, I—Mary was good enough to say I could come home with her."

"We're glad you did, Tom," replied Mrs. Todhunter. "And you've got to stay to supper."

Colonel Todhunter's lips were twitching. "I don't know about that, honey," he spoke. "Tom don't look to me like he's very hungry."

Mary flashed swift indignation at her father. Mrs. Todhunter looked at the colonel in surprise. Then in sudden understanding, she shot a quick glance at the young people. Tom Strickland blushed redder than ever.
Mary dived at her mother one soft volley of entreaty from drowsy eyes and then fled precipitately into the house.
Her face filled with comprehending tenderness, Mrs. Todhunter followed Mary, making no excuses.

"Tom," said Colonel Todhunter, "you seem to have been kicking up a mighty funny mumpus this load o' poles, you say?"

Tom stood like a condemned felon in the dock. "I reckon I have, colonel," he made answer. "Then, after a dismay filled pause,—"I—I've been asking Mary to marry me, sir."

Colonel Todhunter's face was impassive.
Tom Strickland stood very erect.
Pride shone in his eyes. "I don't know, sir, whether you've noticed it or not,"
he resumed, "but I've been in love with Mary for a long time."

A restless twinkle was in Colonel Todhunter's eyes.

"And, sir—and well, Colonel Todhun-ter, it's just this," he said, blushing ingly exclaimed Tom. "I know I don't deserve it—I can't hardly believe it but Mary says she loves me, too—and—well, sir, I want to ask Mrs. Todhun-ter and your consent to our marriage, sir."

Colonel Todhunter was contemplating the young man with eyes brimful of kindly amusement.

"Tom," he said, "as long as you live you'll never forget how scared you are this minute, suh. But you got through with it like a hero, a blamed sight better than I did when I asked for Mrs. Todhunter. That sure was a terrible experience."

But the next moment his face was grave. He laid his hand on young Strickland's shoulder.

"Tom, my boy," he said, "I'd rather give Mary to you than to any other man in the world, and you ought to ha' known it without my tellin' you.
I've known you and liked you all the time you've been growin' up, and I love your father like he was my own brother. I am glad you and Mary have got it all settled, and I'm sure Mrs. Todhunter thinks as much of you as I do. God bless you and Mary both, my boy."

There was a sudden break in the colonel's voice. "It's up to you and Mary to arrange all the rest of it, young man," he spoke again after a little pause. Then, with a whimsical smile: "And all of your troubles are shend of you both. May the good Lord have mercy on your souls."

A splendid gratitude shone in Tom's Mary for a long time." (Continued on page 6)

Tom Archer

A Man Who Was Too Proud to Accept a Favor

By ARNOLD DUTCHER

There are a great many inconsistencies in life, and one of the strangest of these is the acceptance of money favors between friends. A person will seldom accept $10, $100 or even $1, 000 from a friend, or it may be a brother, yet in a matter of a legacy he will rob a dead man's children not yet out of the nursery.
I have sought for the cause of this human idiosyncrasy. The only conclusion I have been able to reach is that it is due almost entirely to pride, usually a mistaken pride, and as often to selfishness. Indeed, it is the result of both. The most abundant cause of it that has ever come to my knowledge was that of Tom Archer. Tom and I were chums as schoolboys, and at that time he appeared to be my superior in everything. He was a better scholar, better at games, more popular both with boys and girls and stood higher as an all around fellow.

Tom and I went to college together, but I didn't stay there very long. My

"YOU DON'T KNOW ME, DO YOU?" HE SAID.

books didn't please me, and I was not strong enough to take part in athletics. I was caught in a prank that was not only silly, but reprehensible, and was expelled. When I went home to my father he said to me:

"I'm sorry for this, my boy, because you'll have to take a back seat in the world on account of it. There's your friend, Tom Archer. I wish for your sake you had taken the stand he is occupying. When you both come to the prime of life you will find him honored and respected, while you will be passed over for a very ordinary person. I'm not saying this to you as a punishment, but as a matter of regret for us both."

I have never forgotten a word of this prediction, which sank upon me like lead. My father secured a position for me as a clerk in a mercantile house, but I wrote a poor hand, could not spell correctly and made mistakes. The head of the firm discharged me, but I begged him to let me see what I could do outside—that is, in working up trade. He consented and I started in again.

Twenty years have passed since then. The concern in which I was employed has grown enormously, and I have grown with it. Indeed, I am now its principal owner and its manager.
I don't exactly know why I was advanced above hundreds of others, but I suppose I must have possessed those instincts that make the business man.
But this is another question. What I am going to illustrate is that sensitive pride, which will lead a man to decline a gift from a friend, and try to legally thwart the intentions of a man in the disposition of his property that he may enjoy it himself.

One day a seedy looking individual came into my office and ignoring the boy who advanced to ask whom he wished to see, passed through the opening in the rail, and, waiting straight up to my desk, put out his hand. I looked at him, puzzled.
"You don't know me, do you?" he said.

"I confess that you have the advantage of me."
"I'm Tom Archer."
I had become trained in that dissimulation which the world requires and succeeded in concealing the shock I experienced at seeing my old chum in such a plight. But when I grasped his hand with a show of the old friendship
I was enacting a lie. All had changed.
He had gone down—very far down—and I had gone, in a practical point of view, very far up. Both of us tried to conceal a recognition of this reversal of our positions and both failed.

Long before Tom left me I realized that he was not only ragged, but hungry, and yet there stood between me and him, so far as my helping him was concerned, our youth, in which I had been his inferior. The price of a meal, a suit of clothes, indeed, a year's income for him, was to me a mere bagatelle, but how could I offer money to one who had led me in everything a score of years before? What I did was to take his address and trust to ma-ingenuity to find a way of getting over the obstacle.

The next day I inclosed a check for $100 in a note, mentioning some favor he had done me when we were boys together and further stating that after all luck was the only cause of success, and I had been lucky. I also claimed that it doubtless gave me more pleasure to give him aid and comfort than he experienced in receiving the same. I served the dish as delicately as possible, but the poor fellow could not swallow it. He sent back the check, stating that his ill success was his own fault, and he would not respect himself if he accepted charity even from an old friend. He had made his bed and he would lie in it.

I respected him for his refusal, and yet I could not but consider it stupid.
I had once offered a man help when he had met with a misfortune in business—who had accepted—the offer, recovered himself and by a bit of sharp practice taken from me three times
the amount I had loaned him.

One morning a woman came into my office and asked if I knew Mr. Thomas Archer. I acknowledged the acquaintance, and she told me that she had gone into a speculation with him in which she had furnished the capital—$200—and it had been sunk. She did not blame Mr. Archer; he had been honest in the matter, but a lawyer had told her that she might proceed criminally against him. She was uncertain what to do.

I asked her if she would take half of her claim against my old friend. She said she would, and on her assignment of it to me I gave her the money. I desired to spare my unfortunate friend pain, but I was mean enough to run the poor woman down to half her loss.
I suppose I should have been ashamed of myself, but I wasn't. I had the cutting down faculty that we successful business men usually possess.

Not long after this Archer dropped in to see me and incidentally mentioned that he had a scheme on hand by which he expected to make a fortune.
I was very glad to hear it, but turned the subject, fearing he might smother his pride so far as to ask me to furnish the necessary capital. I would have loved to supply his wants, even give him luxuries, but I did not wish to invest in his schemes.

It was not difficult to head off so sensitive a man, but in a few days, having gathered his courage, he came back and asked me if I would consider 50 per cent of the profits of the scheme sufficient reimbursement for the capital necessary to develop it. I told him that I knew a man who did that sort of thing and gave him his address. He went off, much encouraged, to find the other man.

Whether poor Tom later came to see through my artifice I don't know; but he never again hinted at giving me the lion's share of the profits of any scheme.

One spring, being very much run down, I desired to go for a few months' trip. The only reason for my not doing so was that I did not care to go alone and knew of no one who would go with me. I thought of Tom, and wrote him a line saying that I was ill and perhaps my life depended upon my taking an outing. If he would go with me, I—paying his expenses, he might save me. He replied that with ing would give him greater joy than to thus accommodate his dear old chum, but he was, at the time, much interested in a patent self filling coat scuttle in which others had advanced the necessary capital, and he could not leave the enterprise without acting dis-honorably toward them.

I was much disappointed. At the same time I knew that his patent scattle was but another name for his sensitive pride which forbade him traveling with me at my expense. I could not but respect him for his independence, but I regretted that it deprived me of his assistance in recovering my health.

It was quite awhile before I heard anything more of Archer, and then I received notice of his death. He had died in a boarding house in a distant city. His landlady had been very kind to him. On the day of his death she wrote me that he had often spoken to her of me and our mutual friendship. I immediately telegraphed her to draw on me for funds with which to pay doctors' bills, funeral expenses and any amount Archer might owe her for board. She drew on me, but only for $100. I felt sure that this would not set matters right and sent a check for a hundred more.

It was returned with a note saying that it was unnecessary.

About a year after this when walking along a street, I saw a man coming who looked very like my friend Archer and just as seedy. I thought he started on seeing me, and he turned down a side street. Curious about the matter I followed him and soon was convinced that he was trying to get away from me. I caught him; he turned to face me, and when our eyes met I saw the most agonized expression I have ever seen on any man's face. He was my old friend Tom.

I saw it all. He could not conquer his pride, but he could resort to the most ingenious expedients to enable me to keep him from starving. I put my arm through his and led him to a restaurant, where I called for a feast and a quart of champagne. After I had filled him up I said:

"This confounded nonsense has been going on long enough. I have decided to leave you the income on $25,000 as long as you live to begin from today you will either accept it or I shall proceed against you criminally for obtaining money under false pretenses. Take your choice."

He chose the annuity. It lifted him out of his abominable condition, and I take more pleasure today in his companionship than that of any other living man.

Best Plan.

"Did you nail the lie?"
"No; I was too busy hammering the lie."—Baltimore American

CHINESE LACQUERING.

Many Layers of Varnish Are Applied to Produce a Fine Finish.

Writing from Hongkong concerning Chinese lacquering work, Consul General G. E. Anderson says:

In general the basis of all lacquering is a varnish obtained from the resinous juice of the Rhus vernicifera, or "varnish tree," "prunell," or "varnish tree," cultivated in many parts of China and Japan for the purpose. This tree in many respects resembles an ash. It grows about fifteen feet high and can live for seven years. The varnish is obtained by making incisions in the bark of the tree near its base before daylight during July, and August, and catching the sap, which exudes as a mixed clear and milky product. This sap is placed in tubs or similar vessels, which are set in the sun to evaporate all moisture. It separates into a clear, almost colorless, resinous liquid, which rises to the top, and into a thicker, more resinous and darker liquid mass which settles to the bottom. The various grades are then separated by decanting
the top, representing the finer grades, and the bottom the lowest grades, useful for ordinary purposes. "Ningpo varnish" and similar ordinary work.

In general, the wood to be lacquered is a soft dry pine. The surface and corner of the article are made as smooth as Chinese process renders it possible. The joints are filled with oakum, paper pulp or strips of grasscloth; the corners are rounded off smoothly; paper is pasted over the joints or rough places, and everything possible is done to present as smooth a surface as possible for the varnish.
The article is then coated with a preparation of coarse powder, vermillion or gamboge, which is allowed to dry, and the whole is then polished or ground down by pumice stone, powdered sand stone or powdered deerhorn or various other similar substances. The preparation is again applied and ground down.

The lacquer itself is then applied with a broad, soft brush as evenly as possible and in a room from which all wind and dust and as much light as can be dispensed with are excluded, the idea being to apply the lacquer and have it dry in a dark, damp place free from all possibility of dust.

After the varnish dries it is ground down or polished with powdered stone or deerhorn or similar substances, and another application is made, dried, ground and polished. The process is repeated according to the nature of the article and the quality of the work.
Three coats representing an ordinary lacquering and fifteen to eighteen coats an ordinary maximum. For solid colors this alternate varnishing and polishing constitutes the finish. Various decorations are applied in different ways. In mother of pearl inlay work for example, the mother of pearl is cut in the desired figures in thin shell, and the pieces are placed in position on the undried surface soon after the application of one of the early coats of varnish and are then varnished over, polished as the rest of the surface, revarnished, and so on, becoming imbedded in the enamel and polished and repolished as a part of it.

Greatest Ocean Depth.

Until the recent sounding of the German survey ship Planet the record for ocean depth was held by a sounding made on the American ship Ner-near Guam, in 1899. The Ner record was 31,608 feet, that obtained by the Planet 32,088 feet. The latter "deep" is located but forty nautical miles east of northern Mindanao. It has long been known that the shore in this region shelves away very rapidly, a depth of 5,000 feet or more occurring within twenty miles of land, but this drop of approximately six miles within a distance of forty miles makes the land face here almost a cliff. According to the German oceanographers who made the discovery, the floor of the Pacific at this point is diversified by a series of hitherto unknown "trenches." The highest mountain, Everest having an altitude of 29,002 feet, it thus appears that the known high and low extremes of the earth's surface are separated by a distance of about 11.5 miles—hardly a surface dent on a ball 8,000 miles in diameter.

DROWNED AT MILWAUKEE

Neil Gallagher, 1st Mate on Car Ferry No 16 falls Overboard.

The remains of Neil Gallagher of Beaver Island, first mate on Car Ferry No. 16, running between Ludington and Milwaukee, reached the city last evening.

From what can be learned it supposed that while the car ferry was at Milwaukee, Mr. Gallagher, who had been ashore, returned to the boat at night and in some manner slipped and fell into the water while going aboard.

The remains were taken to Beaver Island last evening on the tug McCann, where burial will take place.

Neil Gallagher was 35 years old and was born on the island. He is the son of Dominico Gallagher, and leaves a wife and two children.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

COOKING VEAL.

THE best veal, which is that of a calf about two months old, is pale pink or flesh colored in the lean parts. The fat should be clean white. The hind quarters are the choicer cuts. Slices from the legs are called cutlets. Breast and shoulder of the forequarter make stew meat or inferior roasts. The ribs are sold as chops. Roasting pieces and steaks are cut from both leg and loin.

Novel Way of Baking.

Creamed Veal.—Take three pounds of veal, boil and season it and when cold, pick to pieces, as for salad. For dressing take three parts cream and when hot thicken with five tablespoonfuls of flour mixed with four tablespoonfuls of butter and salt to taste. Put veal in the pan, pour dressing over and cover thickly with bread crumbs. Bake in a slow oven.

With Mayonnaise.

Veal Jelly.—Take a veal shank, cover with cold water, let it come to a boil and skim carefully. Add one medium sized onion, a bay leaf, small piece of red pepper, salt and six whole cloves. Boil slowly till the meat falls off bones. Take out the meat, strain the liquid and let it cool while the meat is picked into small pieces. Remove the grease from the liquid. Add to the meat, put into bowls to cool. Serve on lettuce leaves, with mayonnaise dressing.

Served Cold.

Spiced Veal.—Cut some lean cold veal into pieces about one inch square. Pour over them sufficient scalding vinegar to cover, adding to each pint of the same one dozen whole cloves, a half stick of cinnamon, a teaspoonful of salt and a small red pepper or a dozen pepper corns. Allow the veal to stand in this pickle for at least twenty-four hours. It is then ready for use and is nicely served for cold luncheon or supper.

Nicely Seasoned.

Stewed Veal.—Take three pounds of lean veal, cut it into pieces and cook in one ounce of butter, together with half a dozen small onions. After cooking for ten minutes add two tablespoonfuls of flour and moisten with a quart of white broth. Stir well and season with a heaping teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of pepper. Add two or three carrots cut into small squares, an ounce of salt pork cut up into pieces and a bunch of herbs. Cook for forty minutes longer, remove the herbs and serve hot.

eyes. "All I've got to say is this, Colonel Todhunter," he said, "God helping me, I'll make Mary the best husband in the world."

"You'll need the Good Master's help considerably, too, my boy," responded Colonel Todhunter, quizzically. "And don't bank on being a damned success in that there undertaking, son. Be in a good husband ain't no sure-thing, not by a long shot. It's the biggest contract you ever undertook, and you've got to keep hammerin' away at it every minute, son. It's enough to skeer a man to death, Tom, if it wasn't for one thing—bein' a good husband means havin' a happy wife, and that's the finest thing on God's green earth. You just live up to that great truth, Tom, and it's all I'll ask of you."

"You won't have to ask more than once, Colonel Todhunter," replied Tom fervently. "I'll think of nothing but Mary's happiness all my life, sir. And that'll mean mine, too; we're going to be the happiest couple in all the world, colonel."

"Now that's where you slip up again, Tom," said Colonel Todhunter. "Married life ain't just one long dream of unalloyed bliss, not by a jugful, son. You got to take it as it comes, the bad with the good, and sometimes it may look like the good ain't as plentiful as it might be, but that's perfectly when you got to sit tight and watch and pray for a change of luck. And a man's wife ain't no chrome angel; young man, no more'n a woman's husband is. You'll be powerful lucky if Mary makes you as good a wife as her mother's made me, but, all the same, I've seen days when Mrs. Todhunter looked more like a destroyer's eye-bone to me than anything else. And she can tell a hundred shortcomin's on me where I can tell you one on her, so there you are, son. It's give and take, that's what it is, and you just got to do your best, keep on whistlin' for cheerfulness' sake and stand ready to make a quick duck if things get too stormy, son."

Tom Strickland could not help but laugh. "Well, colonel," he responded, "if Mary and I are as happy as you and Mrs. Todhunter I'll be more than satisfied. And I'll try to make her a good husband, I promise you that."

"I know you will, Tom," replied Colonel Todhunter. "And I know Mary'll try to fill her part of the contract the same way too."

The young man's gaze went nervously past the door through which Mary and her mother had vanished.

"I wonder where they are, colonel?" he ventured apprehensively. "I hope there's nothing serious happenin'."

Colonel Todhunter tugged at his grizzled mustache to keep from smiling openly in Tom's face.

"Don't you worry none about Mary and her mother, son," he spoke. "They're just havin' a heart-to-heart talk on the all-absorbin' subject of marriage, Tom, and they got to have a good cry while it's goin' on. I bet they've already shed enough briny tears to float a battleship, son. That's a woman's way at such a time as this. All mothers has got to wall over their daughters then like they was goin' to die 'stead of gettin' married. But they're all right after that, son. When Mary and Mrs. Todhunter get through and wipe each other's weepin' eyes they'll show up out here as serene as a summer's day. I reckon it's the Good Master's will—they got to do it that way, son."

At this moment Mrs. Todhunter appeared in the doorway. She went straight to Tom and put both hands on his shoulders and kissed him on the forehead.

"God bless you and make both of you happy, Tom," she said, her voice trembling. "Mary loves you very dearly. You're got to be a good man, Tom, for her sake. You will, won't you?"

Mary's sweet face was now in Tom's view from where she stood in the shadowy old hall behind her mother. The young man bowed his head at Mrs. Todhunter's tremendous speech.

"God helping me, I will, Mrs. Todhunter," he replied.

Something very like the dimming of tears came into Colonel Todhunter's eyes at the picture thus presented. But he strove manfully to conceal the fact of such emotion.

"Come out here, Mary," he cried indignantly. "You've been leavin' Tom to face the music alone long enough."

But when Mary Todhunter obeyed the summons her father took her into his arms and pressed his unsuspecting quivering lips to her brown hair.

"Ain't you ashamed of yourself, honey?" he asked, "for leavin' me just because that snip of a Tom Strickland wants you? We're goin' to be mighty lonesome without you, daughter."

And then because Mary cried, her face blushed on his breast, Colonel Todhunter scowled ferociously at Tom.

"It's all your fault, you young rascal!"

WEST MICHIGAN STATE FAIR A DAY AND NIGHT EXHIBITION; SEPT. 1-5

Will Be Greatest Fair in History of Association—Over $11,000 Already Spent for Entertainment of Visitors—Grounds and Buildings to be Electrically Lighted Evenings—Association Has Adopted "Education" as Its Motto.

(United Weekly Press Association)
Grand Rapids, Mich.—The West Michigan State Fair Ass'n. by using for its motto, "Education," and directing all its efforts along those lines as will make the fair largely instructive are planning on holding the greatest fair in Michigan, the dates being September 1 to 5 inclusive.

What it has been in years past is no measure of what it is to be, says manager and secretary C. F. Kennedy. "The Fair this year will open Monday and remain open until

Friday evening, with a program crowded full of life, activity and interest every hour of the day.

The grounds and buildings will be lighted and five nights of Spectacles, Specials and Fire Works will be the "Evening at the Fair." We have contracted for Paine's grandest spectacle, "A Battle in the Clouds," to be followed by the greatest fire works display that money can buy.

It is no longer necessary to argue to exhibitors and those acquainted with the history of the Fair work, the great force these fairs exert as an educational and improvement society. Not only this, but as a disarming mart for live stock of all kinds and for extending the intercourse among men engaged in the live stock industry there is no agency yet known that can approach it in this field of endeavor.

That a fire, can be a blessing rather than an affliction, will be exemplified when one surveys the new concrete and steel Grand Stand which necessity has provided. Here the surroundings will be comfortable that the afternoon builds unsparringly, trusting in the desire for better things and the capacity of men to know and appreciate the good. It is such a merit success.

At the fair grounds Mgr. Kennedy is one of the busiest men and is in personal charge of the many great improvements that are being made.

One improvement in handling the crowds this year at the fair, will be most convenient for the public. The street railway company has given its word that it will run a loop into the grounds enabling those leaving to buy their cars and bridge tickets at special booths and board the car through gates.

A Bureau of Information with headquarters both on the grounds and in the city, will be maintained and information as to time of trains, both regular and special, and steam and traction lines, arriving and leaving, will be available. Also location of depots, hotels and rooming—houses, together with rates for lodging as well as information of a general character will be afforded all visitors.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by mortgage, dated the 14th day of January, 1913, executed by E. B. Ward and Annie E. Ward, his wife, of the city of Charlevoix, Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Thomas Quinlan & Sons Co. Ltd., of Petoskey, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, more particularly in the 11th day of January, 1913, and Whereas, said mortgage was duly assigned by said Thomas Quinlan & Sons Co. Ltd., to the Dexter Savings Bank of Dexter, Michigan, on the day of January, A. D. 1913, which assignment was duly recorded in said register's office on the 11th day of January, 1913, in Liber 24 of mortgages on page 47. Farm Dairying

XVII.—Cow Diseases. First Article.

By LAURA ROSE,
Demonstrator and Lecturer in Dairying
at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

(Copyright, 1911, by A. C. McClurg & Co.)
FLYES are a terrible torment at times and have much to do with the lessening of the milk flow. The cows are so worried and kept so busy fighting the flies that they lose much of the time they should be feeding, and it is their semi-starved condition that largely causes the shrinkage in flesh and milk.

Something should be done to rid the cows of this fly pest.

The following mixture has been found as effective and less expensive than many of the fly remedies on the market:

One gallon of fish or seal oil or old grease of any kind, one pint of coal oil (kerosene) and two ounces (four table-spoonsful) of crude carbolic acid.

Mix well together and apply with a cloth or spray to all parts except the udder. Always put it on after milking to avoid the strong odor getting into the milk. In dry weather one application a week is usually sufficient. If the cows are out in a heavy rain it will be necessary to go over them again.

Another fly remedy is ten parts of lard or other grease to one part of pine tar. Mix well and apply with a brush or cloth once or twice a week to the parts most attacked. This is splendid as a relief from the horn fly.

If the flies make the cows restless during milking so that they will not stand, a cotton blanket thrown over them at that time is a great help.

Keep the Stable Dark.

It is a good plan to darken the stable during the day and to have the windows screened.

To prevent the flies that are on the cows from going into the stable with them arrange some evergreen boughs, brush, brooms or sackings at the entrance. As the cows pass through this many flies are brushed off and remain outside.

The housefly has always been a troublesome nuisance, but now it is looked upon as a very potent agent in spreading such dangerous diseases as typhoid fever, cholera infantum, summer complaint, etc.

If a cow shows symptoms of being ill do not delay doing something for her. Begin at once to check the trouble.

Every dairy stable should have in it a medicine chest or shelf provided with such drugs as are commonly used in cases of sickness among the animals. A short list is given below. Each bottle or package should be distinctly labeled and the supply renewed as soon as exhausted: Spirits of turpentine, raw linseed oil, sulphur, salicylate, carbolic acid, nux vomica, epsom salts, ground ginger, vasoline, camphorated oil, laudanum, boracic acid.

There should be on hand a common bicycle pump, a few feet of rubber hose and a milk siphon or tube to insert in the teat. Immerse the tube in boiling water to disinfect it and oil before gently inserting it into the teat opening.

How to Examine a Sick Cow.

First, take the temperature of the animal by placing a self-registering veterinary fever thermometer in the rectum, allowing it to remain there from three to five minutes. The normal temperature of a cow is from 98 to 100 degrees F., but in some cows may be higher. It is usually so in young animals.

Second, take the pulse, which can be found at the angle of the lower jaw bone. The normal beat of a cow's pulse is from fifty to sixty per minute.

Third, count the respirations of the animal or number of times it breathes by watching the sides of the flanks or by pressing your ear to her side. The normal respiration of a cow is from fifteen to twenty per minute.

If the temperature, pulse or respiration is found to vary much from the normal, you will know the animal is ailing. Dull, glazed eyes; cold ears; dry, hot nose; harsh, rumpled coat; lack of appetite; rumination ceased and sudden shrinkage of milk are outward indications that something is wrong with the cow.

Milk from sick cows is unwholesome and in some cases positively dangerous.

Sick animals should be removed from the herd, and especially if there be any suspicion of a contagious disease.

Parturient Apoplexy—Commonly Called Milk Fever.

Cause.—Milking the cow out too thoroughly after calving. Better not to draw any milk the first twenty-four hours, but just leave the calf with the cow. If for any reason it is not desirable to leave the calf with her draw only a little milk at frequent intervals the first three days if trouble be feared. If this rule is followed milk fever is not likely to occur.

Symptoms.—These develop from four to thirty-six hours after calving. Rumination ceases; sudden decrease in milk flow; dullness of the eyes; unsteady gait; stamping with the hind legs; at length falls helpless to the ground, turns head to one side and eyes close or lies flat with extremities extended.

Treatment.—It is usually a fatal mistake to dose for milk fever. In many cases the muscles of the throat are paralyzed, and the cow, having no power to swallow, the medicine given goes into the lungs and often causes death.

The treatment giving prompt relief in the severest cases and one to be relied on is filling the udder with pure oxygen or with common air by means of a bicycle pump or a rubber bulb syringe and a common milk siphon or similar tube. Pump the udder as full as possible and put a rubber band around the teats, or tie with tape to keep in the air. Massage the udder so as to force the air to all parts. It may be necessary to repeat the inflation.

This treatment usually effects a cure in a few hours. Do not give any medicine.

Mammitis—Caked Udder—Inflammation of Udder—Garget.

Symptoms.—Usually at first the milk is watery and sometimes discolored with blood and may contain clotted, curdy matter, and the part affected is swollen and painful. In severe cases the cow will have a chill, and the limbs, ears and horns become cold. Then fever will follow and the udder becomes hot, swollen and hard. The milk flow decreases or stops. The cow eats but little and does not chew her cud.

Treatment.—Give oxygen treatment as described for milk fever and a good dose of salts. If the udder remains hard rub well with goose grease or camphorated oil. When the entire udder is caked take a piece of heavy cloth and put it under the udder, making incisions for the teats, and fasten it on top, placing straw or a pad on the back so as not to chafe the cow. This relieves the udder by easing the weight.

For Inflamed Udder.

Rub well after milking with liniment made from four ounces sweet oil, four ounces laudanum, three ounces of extract of belladonna.

Slimy or Ropy Milk (Not a Disease).

Milk which becomes stringy, slimy or ropy after standing awhile is not due to the cow's condition, but is caused by a large number of bacteria which develop in the milk and change the milk sugar into a slimy or ropy mass. The bacteria usually come from dust or bad water and get into the milk at milking time or afterward.

A CLEAN SEPARATOR HELPS KEEP THE MILK AND CREAM SANITARY.

Thoroughly clean and disinfect the stable and scald all milk pails, strainers, cans, etc.

Lumps in Teats.

If the lump or tumor be near the point or halfway up the teat a veterinarian may operate successfully; otherwise it is well to keep the cow as she will not improve and her offspring may be similarly affected.

Cowpox.

Symptoms.—Teats very sore, break out in pimples and form scabby sores. A troublesome contagious disease, and the cow should be isolated.

A milker can take it from one cow to another on his hands or clothes.

Remedy.—Dress the sores three times a day with an ointment made by mixing four drams boracic acid, twenty drops of carbolic acid, with two ounces of vasoline.

If the teats are very sore it may be well to use a teat siphon to draw the milk.

Diarrhea or Scours in Calves.
Cause.—Overfeeding, sudden changes in feed, filthy, wet stalls, dirty feed pails, etc.

Treatment.—A cup of strong black tea is said to be good. Others give from one to two ounces of castor oil and one teaspoonful of laudanum. Feed new milk and keep everything clean. Four or five hours after the oil is given a teaspoonful of a mixture of one part salol and two parts sublimated of 14-smith may be given in half a pint of milk or the powder placed on the tongue and washed down with a little milk. A simple remedy is to add to the milk one-fifth of its bulk of lime water.

MAINTENANCE OF EARTH ROADS

Center Should Be Raised and Slope Gently Into Shallow Ditches.

KEEP OFF ALL SURFACE WATER

The Best Method to Keep it Smooth is to Use the Road Drag.

A Good Team of Horses With a Well Built Drag
Will Cover Three or Four Miles a Day
—Some Good Suggestions.

If you look at the ordinary country road after a shower you will see small puddles along the wheel ruts and sometimes larger pools. This water stays on the road surface because it cannot drain away into the side ditches. If you look closely you will see side ditches which have grown up with bushes and weeds in many cases, and which are so far from the traveled part of the road that the rain water does not drain into them. The part of the roadway where the wagons travel is called the traveled way. To prevent water from standing on the traveled way the road should be raised in the center and should slope gently into broad shallow ditches. It is then said to have a crown. If it is 10 feet from the center of the road to the side ditch, the surface at the side ditch should be at least 10 inches lower than it is at the center where the horses travel. The road then has a 10-inch crown. The rain that falls on a road properly crowned will run quickly to the side and not soak into the surface or form pools. The side ditches for surface water should run parallel to the right of way, and should be open at every low point so that the water can run out of them into neighboring brooks or streams. If the ditches merely collect the water from the road surface and it cannot run away, large pools will be formed along the roadside, which will gradually soak into the soil beneath the road and make it so soft that the wheels of wagons will cut through the road surface and soon destroy it.

Sometimes water runs from land along the road into the road and forms a little stream down the wheel tracks or in the middle where the horses travel. When driveways into farm yards are built across the side ditches they frequently form channels for water from the farm yard to run into the road. The pipes under driveways become filled with leaves or rubbish and the water can no longer run away. If the driveways that stop the ditch water were rebuilt so that no pipes were necessary and the ditch could be left open, much trouble from surface water would be stopped.

Sometimes a road runs across low ground or through a swamp where the road cannot be drained by side ditches alone. If the road were built higher like a railroad embankment across such low land and made with a crown, it would be dry and hard. Sometimes a road passes through what is called a cut. This is a place where the earth has been dug out so that the road can go over a hill without being too steep. The water which always flows quietly under the ground on hill sides is known as ground water. In road cuts such water sometimes makes the road very muddy, and the road then needs what road builders call underdrainage. A good kind of underdrainage is a trench to go along under the side drain and about three feet deep and a foot and a half wide. In this trench a pipe is laid near the bottom and covered with loose stones no bigger than an egg. When the trench is completely filled with loose stones the ground water, instead of soaking into the roadway, will stop among the stones and flow down the hill through the pipe.

To keep a road smooth and crowned the best method is to drag it with a road drag. A road drag is made easily with two halves of a log which has been split. The log should be about six or eight inches in thickness and about six or eight feet long. The two halves of the log are set three feet apart with the smooth faces forward and upright. They are then fastened together with braces set in holes bored through the log. A pair of horses may be used to drag the road and are hitched to a chain fastened to the front half of the log. The road drag should move forward so that it floats across the road in such a way that a small amount of earth will slide past the smooth face of the log toward the center of the road, thus forming the crown. The edges of the logs will smooth out the ruts. The best way to drag is to begin at the side ditch and go up one side of the road, and then down the other. In the next trip the drag should be started a little nearer the center and the last trip over the road the drag may work close to the center itself. Small ridges of earth will be thrown in the horse track and smeared by the round side of the log smoothly over the road. The smearing of the earth by the drag is called "puddling" and it tends to make the surface of the road smooth and watertight after the sun comes out. The road is always dragged after it has rained and not when it is dry. A good strong pair of horses with a well-built drag can drag about three or four miles of road in a day, and it is the best way to maintain good roads. In every county some farmers along each four miles of road should own a drag and drag the road when it rains. He would always find the road in good condition when he goes to market.

HELD REUNION

At Home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Supernaw of Norwood.

A most enjoyable celebration of the Fourth of July took the form of a reunion, participated in by twenty seven sons, daughters, grandchildren and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Supernaw, at the home of the latter near Norwood, on the Fourth of July.

Besides the hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Supernaw, there were present, Mr. W. L. French and daughters, Elvarene and Catharine, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Meech, their daughter Helen, and three children, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Barr and child, all of East Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. William Supernaw and three children, of Charlevoix, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Supernaw and their two sons from Traverse City, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Galloway and three children, and Mrs. Addie Hutchins of Chicago, Frank Van Hatten and son of Grand Rapids.

The participants commenced to arrive at the farm on the night before and by the following morning all had arrived.

Dinner and supper were served upon the front lawn, where three tables were required to accommodate all. After dinner all went to the beach at Norwood, where most of the afternoon was spent in wading and bathing. It was late into the night after having some fireworks, that the guests began to depart.

Flying Boats to Arrive Between Hours of Eleven and One—Good Roads Auto Tourists Arrive at Noon—Addresses by Governor Ferris and Others—Many Stunts to be Pulled Off.

"We're all going to Charlevoix to see the flying boats," is the general sentiment expressed by citizens as far south as Traverse City and Petoskey, Harbor Springs and other points to the north. It will be the greatest stunt ever pulled off in northern Michigan, and Charlevoix is making preparations to care for the huge crowd sure to be present. "The international flying boat race will prove the greatest event known in aviation," said William Pickens, director of the contest, in a recent interview. "It will be no pink tea gathering, nor an event in which the weather conditions will govern the schedule. From the start on Tuesday noon until the finish in Detroit eight days later, the flyers will be called upon to sail in whatever wind is blowing when the time to start arrives."

"I have just returned from a trip around the route selecting the landing and control locations. The aviators will not have breakwaters to give them calm water if the waves are high. At six stops the men will have to land their boats in the open lake."

The revised schedule of controls of the trip, which started Tuesday morning, are as follows:

Michigan City, night July 8.
Macatawa Bay, noon July 9.
Lake Harbor, night July 9.
Manistee, night July 10.
Charlevoix, night July 11.
Nackinac Island, night of 12 and Sunday.

Harrisville, night July 14.
Bay City, night July 15.
Port Huron, night July 16.
Finiah, Detroit, 2 p. m. July 17.

The contestants are required to carry anchor, signal lights, compass and signal flags and be capable of anchoring like cruising boats in case of necessity. Some of the contestants are going to carry two days provisions for an emergency, life preservers and complete tool kits.

Each machine must carry a passenger all the way to Detroit. A time table has been arranged which the contestants will be required to follow, or suffer the penalty of one point for each minute late at a control. Twelve contestants have entered, representing all makes of flying machines. The flyers will be allowed to make stops between controls for taking on gasoline, oil and supplies.

The flying boats are scheduled to arrive at Charlevoix between the hours of 11 and 1, at five minute intervals. They will enter the city by way of the channel, and land in Round Lake. Their approach will be announced by the blowing of whistles. Later in the afternoon they will again take flight and go to Pine Lake, some landing opposite the Inn and the balance opposite the Belvedere hotel.

The local committees have been preparing entertainment for the thousands of visitors, other than the wonderful sight of the flying boats. In the afternoon there will be a race between one of the fast local motor boats and a flying boat. Other stunts will be pulled off such as log burling contests between rivermen from East Jordan, Boyne City and Charlevoix, for which three cash prizes are offered to winners, $15 first, $10 second and $5 third. There will also be a canoe exhibition and canoe jousting contest, and other sports not as yet fully decided upon.

Mrs. Grundy's Summer Dessert.

For a tasty, always appetizing summer dessert, try this:

Take—
1 pretty summer girl.
1 regular summer man.
1 summer resort, anywhere.
½ gossips, well seasoned.

Mix ingredients thoroughly, place in a prominent place on the lawn, stir in occasional pinches of rumor, bring to a gentle simmer. When about ready for skimming, drop in—

1 new girl, very tender and sweet.

This will cause the mixture to boil hard. Do not cover, but skim carefully, until two or three principle ingredients come to the top. Remove these two, place in a quiet nook on the veranda, and leave to cool. Squeeze the remainder through a tennis net and throw away.

Serve in liberal portions, garnished with imagination. If the new girl does not please the fancy of the company, let the company go elsewhere for its desserts.

BAPTIST SERVICES CHANGED

Baptist Young People's Union To Be Held After Evening Service.

In order to accommodate the many young people that are working up on the resort who find it impossible to attend the young people's service at the regular hour, the time of both evening services has been changed for one month and if the experiment prove satisfactory, will continue for the rest of the season. The morning service will be held at the usual hour but the preaching service in the evening has been changed from 7.30 to 7 p. m., followed by the young people's service beginning at eight o'clock. The change of time began with last Sunday's service and as a result many new faces were noticed in the audience and everybody seemed well pleased with the new arrangement.

FRYHOFFER BACK

Well Known Real Estate Auctioneer Soon to Open up Business at Pine Point.

Geo. W. Fryhofer, who had charge of the sale of Pine Point lots last summer, arrived in the city Sunday on the Manitowish.

Mr. Fryhofer has spent the past winter at Palm Beach, Florida, selling real estate, putting in one of the most successful winter's work in the history of his career as an auctioneer. He will again have in charge the sale of lots at Pine Point, and when he opens up business, which he states will be the latter part of July, there will be something doing every minute in the real estate line.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING

To be Held in High School Building Monday Evening of July 14.

The annual school meeting of School District No. 1, of the city and township of Charlevoix will be held Monday evening, July 14, at 7:30 o'clock, in the high school building. There should be a good attendance at this meeting as there are several matters of importance to consider.

One member of the board of trustees is to be elected to succeed F. J. Meech, whose term expires. The reports of expenditures of the past year will be submitted by the treasurer, the amount of money to be apportioned for the ensuing year will be reported to the meeting and other matters pertaining to the welfare of the school will be discussed.

GOT A SNOOT FULL

Pigs Owned by Central Take Druggist Celebrate Fourth.

Pigs owned by E. A. Fox of Central are in disgrace. The Fourth of July they all got drunk, and with Antrim county in the dry list at that.

During the recent hot spell a pair of candy melted in Fox's store and, being unsalable, it was carried home and thrown into a refuse box. Soon afterward a few pounds of moldy grain were also thrown in the same box. That night it rained and the next day the sun shone hotly. As a consequence, the mixture fermented and as the pigs had access to the box it was not long before they were disgracefully intoxicated.

$7 Ahead This Year.

Primary school funds for this year will amount to $7 per capita. The money will be apportioned on July 15, according to the school population as recorded in the last school census.

It is figured that fully 15,000 school children will not be included in the apportionment, as there are many districts where last year's primary funds are still on hand and under the law there can be no apportionment, where funds still exist.

Keep Your Lawn Cut.

Nothing looks better than a well kept and close cut lawn. You cannot keep grass down with a dull lawn mower. Let me sharpen your machine. A lawn mower grinder such as I have will do the work satisfactorily. John W. Kirby, near the creamery.—Adv. 27c3pd

MAIL CARRIERS HAVE NO SNAP

Charlevoix Gray Coats Cover Many Miles
Each Day.

MAKE TRIPS RAIN OR SHINE

Carry From 40 to 100 Pounds of Mail
Each Trip.

Each Handle 221,400 Pieces of Mail Matter Annually—Also Collects Mail From 28 Different Boxes.

Charlevoix residents who have looked with envy or what they considered the "soft jobs" of the gray uniformed letter carriers as they walk along the shady sides of the streets probably wouldn't consider the work such a snap if they were compelled to walk almost 16 miles every day, rain or shine, hot or cold, in the delivery and collection of mail matter. The exact average distance traveled by each of Uncle Sam's mail men in Charlevoix is 16 miles, which represents a total for the year, allowing for the 15 days vacation given each man, of more than 4650 miles.

Of course a little jaunt each day of something more than 16 miles isn't anything when one gets used to it and blistered feet are all healed up, but when a sack of mail weighing anywhere from 40 to 100 pounds has to be toted, and sometimes two sacks, with heavy parcel post packages hung from straps and buttonholes and flapping back and forth it is an entirely different matter. Then, in addition to that, the mail man has to keep track of all the letters and postal cards and papers and packages and deliver them where they belong. He also has to collect mail from 28 mail boxes located in all parts of the city. Three collections are made daily in the business sections, and two in the residence sections. He also has to make an afternoon collection on all holidays, when the average citizen is taking a rest. He may make a mistake occasionally, but when error becomes chronic he is quite apt to resign and seek some other employment.

The report just made by Postmaster A. L. Fitch to the postoffice department shows that the average weight of all mail matter delivered daily by each of the carriers in the Charlevoix postoffice is 104 pounds, an average of 735 pieces of mail daily, of which 408 are letters and cards, which in the 300 working days of each carrier amounts to a little more than 15 tons, while the number of separate pieces of mail matter handled in the course of the year by each carrier is 221,400. Each carrier serves daily an average of almost 1250 people, which doesn't mean that each of them receive a letter or mail package each day, but that the carrier has to remember the names and addresses of that number on his route and see that mail addressed to them is properly delivered.

There are 42 deposit in the postal savings department of the Charlevoix postoffice, and the amount of money to their credit is $94,000. None of the depositors made application to convert their savings into government bonds as they could do by filing notice with the postmaster.

July 1st the new postoffice ruling relative to C. O. D. parcel post went into effect, and many persons have taken advantage of the plan. By a recent ruling of the postoffice department, in effect, ordinary postage stamps can now be affixed to parcel post packages. Another order provided that packages up to the value of $25 may be insured for 3 cents while C. O. D. packages are insured up to $50.

During the month of July, August and September parcels post deliveries are being made by special vehicle. Two deliveries are made each day. Clinton Cooper, substitute carrier, having charge of this work.

Glasses Fitted.

Monday July 21st is the date when J. Leahy the optometrist will be at Baker's Inn, one day only. Headache cured—crossed eyes straightened—without an operation. Glasses guaranteed to fit.—Adv. 38c

THIS IS CERTAIN

The Proof That Charlevoix Readers Cannot Doubt.

What could furnish stronger evidence of the efficiency of any remedy than the test of time. Thousands of people testify that Doan's Kidney Pills have brought lasting results.

Grateful endorsements should prove undoubtedly the merits of this remedy. Years ago people right in this locality testified to the relief they had derived from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. They now confirm their testimonials. They say that time has completed the test.

A. Hechick, assistant supt. of Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 399 Madison Ave., Petoskey, Mich., says: "The public statement given by me in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills while living in Niles, still holds good. For nearly three years I was caused great suffering by a constant ache across my lower back. I was unable to sit for any length of time. I was in bad shape when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. One box completely relieved me, although other remedies failed. I had a recurrence of the trouble some time later, but I again took Doan's Kidney Pills, and they removed the attack."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McBirney Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Obeys That Impulse

Instead of enduring the daily torment of weak back, backache, sore kidneys, swollen joints and rheumatism, obey that impulse to take Foley Kidney Pills. They cooperate with nature, which accounts for their success in all kidney and bladder disorders. They are healing, strengthening and tonic. Obey that impulse today and give them a chance to help you. Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

NORWOOD.

Several of our young people spent the fourth in Petoskey.

Norwood can boast of quite a display of fire works the evening of the fourth.

Mrs. J. L. Ferguson of Chicago is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Chase.

Mrs. Chas. Ferguson of Chicago is spending a few days at the Ferguson cottage.

Ted Pearl has resumed work in Charlevoix after spending a few weeks at home.

A band of gypsies followed by Under Sheriff Norak hurried through town last Thursday.

Miss Jessie Stafford went to Charlevoix last week, where she expects to sew during the summer.

Mrs. Henry VanDusen of Inwood, is staying with her daughter, Mrs. H. A. Stafford, who is ill.

Rheumatism and the Heart.

Don't overlook the grave fact that rheumatism, early, settles in the heart, and disturbs the valvular action. The cure consists in removing the cause. Foley Kidney Pills so tone up and strengthen the kidneys that they keep the blood free of poisons and uric acid crystals, that cause rheumatism, swollen joints, backache, urinary irregularities, and disturbed heart action. Try them. Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

ATWOOD

Cherries are ripe.

Corn knee high.

Hattie Kloster is in Grand Rapids on a visit.

The L. A. S. have a business meeting next Thursday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard of Central Lake are visiting their sister, Mrs. C. Vandersteed.

George Visser of Grand Rapids, was here last week visiting relatives and old friends.

Ralph Cameron of Chattanooga, Tennessee, was at C. Joffe's one day last week on business.

Next Monday evening is the regular annual school meeting. All come out—don't stay at home, then kick.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson of Missoula, who have been visiting their daughter, Mrs. H. Kizinga, returned home last week.

The Difference Between "The Summer Girl" and "The Summer Woman."

While the former is having a "good time" the latter is too often dragging around nervous, run down, tired out, with aching back and weary limbs, sleepless and wretched. Often it is kidney trouble not female trouble and Foley Kidney Pills are a direct and positive help for the condition. Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

NORTH BAY.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Dan McLellan June 24, a daughter.

Several from North Bay celebrated the fourth at Hortons Bay.

Children's day exercises at Hortons Bay were held Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Hartley White of Hortons Bay were callers at Mr. Starmers Saturday.

Mrs. Edd Starmers was sick with heart trouble last week, but at present she is much better.

Fourth of July dinner. I wonder if any of the rest of us can do that.

Mrs. M. A. Phillips, Mrs. Clara Dodd, Mrs. Arthur Beattie and children and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Dodd spent Friday with Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Beattie and son, Wesley.

If a substitute is offered you for Foley Kidney Pills, it means a cheaper medicine is pressed upon you for the dealer's profit, not for yours. Foley Kidney Pills may cost the dealer more than a cheap substitute, but they give better results than any other kidney and bladder medicine. Ask for Foley Kidney Pills, Ivy Drug Store.—Adv.

BAY SHORE

Grain crops are looking fine.

Mrs. J. Karcher is having a serious time with a lame felon.

TWO SPECIAL MEETINGS

Mr. James H. McConkey to Speak at the Baptist Church.

Mr. James H. McConkey, the noted Y. M. C. A. lecturer, author and religious writer will speak again at the Baptist church on Thursday evening at 7:30 also next Sunday morning at 10:30. Mr. McConkey, who is a layman of the Presbyterian church, has for many years devoted his entire time to the teaching of the bible, holding bible conferences and delivering addresses at Y. M. C. A. gatherings, etc.

He is also the author of many religious books and tracts, some of which have already been translated and published in a number of foreign languages. Last Sunday Mr. McConkey spoke to a large and appreciative audience at the Baptist church and upon the invitation of the pastor has consented to preach again on Thursday evening at 7:30 also next Sunday morning at 10:30. Everybody welcome.

Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS

Copyright, 1911, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

CHAPTER IX. Colonel Todhunter Takes the Stump in Rural Missouri.

As a result of Colonel Todhunter's picturesque prosecution of the Strickland campaign in St. Louis he was unanimously chosen by the Hon. William J. Strickland's managers to invade the Yancey stronghold throughout the state.

Todhunter's a champion vote getter, Strickland said old Governor Leslie, "and that's a mighty rare gift. Any ordinary spellbinder can keep a candidate's own friends in line during a campaign and get 'em to the polls on election day. But it takes a man of uncommon qualities to steal friends away from the other fellow. Todhunter's that sort of man. He's a natural horn campaigner, and the answer we put him right on the firing line the better."

This fitted him admirably with the colonel's own wishes. It was at the big barbecue in Dunklin county, where he met the redoubtable Bedford Giles on the stump, that Colonel Todhunter made himself famous throughout the length and breadth of Missouri.

Bedford Giles was probably the finest living master of the old school of powerful political oratory that once so powerfully swayed the minds of men in the south and middle west. It may be said that he lacked the sense of humor, offsetting this deficiency by a sort of leonine earliness that had never failed to score abundantly in the campaigns of which he was a conspicuous figure. The announcement of a speech by Bedford Giles was in itself sufficient to concentrate Missourians at one given point from a radius of twenty miles around. And they were never disappointed, because this renowned spellbinder, in his temperament a raging tragedian of the old Edwin Forrest type, invariably tore their emotional beings to tatters and left them convinced for all time that they had assuredly been listening to the most irresistible orator of their day.

Against this man was Colonel Todhunter pitted on the day of the barbecue, and the certainty of witnessing a great encounter attracted to the scene of their meeting the biggest crowd ever assembled at a political gathering in that county. Enthusiasm was at fever heat. The fact that it was largely Yancey enthusiasm placed the colonel at a decided disadvantage, but instead of depressing his dauntless soul this seemed rather to key him up to his best fighting mood.

During the forenoon, as was not uncommon, there had been a generous flow of good liquor. The orators of the day were naturally expected to give a satisfying account of themselves in disposing of this demerol output. Both were seasoned veterans in the task.

It was a peculiarly of Bedford Giles, however, that when he roared a certain stage of exhilaration his mental horizon so widened and his imagination took such wings to itself that his spellbinding eloquence soared more in the realm of fancy than of fact. His figures of speech became overwhelming in bold poetry of conception and application, and, for the time being, the sonorous rounding out of his excited thought into splendid sentences was of far more importance in his estimation than the structure of truth upon which they were supposed to be based. His Missouri hearers enjoyed this phase of his oratory keenly. By the time he was primed to such gorgeous flights they, too, were similarly primed to accompany him, so that the conclusion of one of Bedford Giles' speeches never failed to witness a scene of magnificent emotional proportions.

Upon this occasion, mellow as a peach, Bedford Giles fairly outdid himself in his barbecue tribute to the virtues of the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey. Now, in reality, Yancey was not a candidate of the "magnificent" class. He had many friends, he was known as a steadfast party man, and it was conceded that he possessed a particularly shrewd knack of always "sluing up" with the stronger faction in party divisions. It requires more than these things, however, to make of a candidate one of those formidable political figures for whom the party rank and file delight to cheer for sheer "love and affection's sake," as the old phrase has it.

But Bedford Giles, the cockles of his heart warmed by liberal potations, idealized the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey, and the peroration of his speech was one of the finest and most typical examples of Gileslan eloquence.

"I am not asking you, my fellow citizens," he declared sonorously, "to nominate Stephen K. Yancey to the proud office of chief executive of the imperial commonwealth of Missouri in the sacrifice of others equally deserving. No, my friends, if this were the case I should not feel the supreme confidence that I do now feel in your entire willingness thus to honor him, nor in the wisdom of your decision in his favor."

"But, fellow Democrats, I speak no more than the simple truth when I solemnly declare, here and now, that the gentleman competing with Stephen K. Yancey for your suffrages are no more to be compared with that peerless leader than the tallow candle of our forefathers is to be compared with the Al-mighty's own handwork of universal illumination, the glorious orb of day that now shines so benignly down upon this representative assemblage of the sovereign American people."

"I have no hesitancy, my friends, in placing the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey before you today as the unrivaled product of a civilization, of a nation and of a people that have in their splendid conjunction produced the most godlike development of the race of man known in the world's history, my hearers. Stephen K. Yancey, my fellow Missourians, is more than a mere Democrat, high though that title may justly place him in the scale of human progress. He is the spotless archangel of American democracy. His garments are as pure as the driven snow, and his dawning sword of battle is the weapon of righteousness. His mind is the abiding place of political chastity, and his soul cherishes the untainted thoughts of the sweet minded child, or of those celestial cherubims who are the heavenly parallels of earthly infancy. And I say to you now, my fellow citizens, that when the mighty Gabriel, with his avowal trumpet, sounds that awful blast that shall summon us all to the judgment bar for a final accounting, supreme among the elect who shall arise on that great day and make answer to their records on the open scrolls of the recording angel, the man without one mark to his discredit made by that angelic pen, the man not one jot or tittle afraid of the unfolding of those august registers, the man against whom may be pointed neither the accusing fingers of men nor seraphim in condemnation for the deeds of his doing, will be the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey of Jackson county, in whose behalf I now ask your vote at the approaching primaries. I thank you for your kind attention."

An apprehensive uneasiness crept into the faces of the local Yancey managers on the speakers' platform.

"Fellow citizens," spoke Colonel Todhunter, "old Bill Strickland, ain't got no business settin' himself up in opposition to a man who meets all the moral requirements of the heavenly seraphim, like Bedford Giles says the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey meets 'em."

In the very front rows of the crowd facing the speaker broad smiles of humorous comprehension began to be visible.

"And old Bill Strickland ain't got no business," conceded Colonel Todhunter, "askin' you to give him your votes 'stead of givin' 'em to a man that'll shine at the judgment bar on the last day at the blowin' of Gabriel's horn. Like Bedford Giles says the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey's 'noble' to shine."

"E-yow-wow-wow!" came a rapturous American whoop of tickled approval from somewhere in the crowd.

"A man," said Colonel Todhunter, "who'll face the recordin' angel himself without the flicker of an eyelash secure in his consciousness of his own immaculate perfection."

A great underwave of laughter, held in leash, swung to and fro through the confronting assemblage.

And then Colonel Todhunter rose to his full height of six feet, thrusting his right hand into the bosom of his ample skirted coat.

"My friends," he announced, "all I can say in excuse for old Bill Strickland is that he thought he was ruinin' against just a plain human bein' for the Democratic nomination for governor of Missouri."

Suddenly he bowed his head, threw out his hands deprecatingly and then lifted his eyes mournfully as he stood once more erect.

"Fellow Democrats," he cried, "I hereby announce the withdrawal of the Hon. William J. Strickland from this race, and I wish to state that the withdrawal is made in favor of the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey on the strength of the description of Mr. Yancey just given by Bedford Giles."

There was a moment of astonished silence.

Colonel Todhunter remained standing. Again he lifted his hand. "Provided," he said, "that Bedford Giles can furnish proof of the truth of the claims he has just made for the Hon. Stephen K. Yancey, coverin' the spotless archangelic business, the sword of righteousness, the celestial chariot, the heavenly seraphim, the unfolded scrolls of the recordin' angel, and so forth and so forth, straight down to the garments pure as the driven snow and the mind of political chastity, and includin' the whole blessed outfit, my hearers!"

A mighty roar of pent up laughter burst forth.

It was like an explosion. Men rocked to and fro on their feet in uncontrollable mirth. They smote one another on the back, abouting in gurgantuan chorus. In the midst of the demonstration Bedford Giles, stricken by the thunderbolt of ridicule, sprang from his seat and actually fled the scene.

Colonel Todhunter gazed after his disappearing figure in such apparent astonishment that the cyclone of laughter increased in its overwhelming volume. But the colonel stood unmoved, his face absolutely impassive.

And when the sun set on that memorable day, a new record had been made in the colorful history of Missouri political campaigning. Colonel Todhunter in a five minutes speech had battered down the walls of the Yancey stronghold, until then thought to be the most impregnable in all Missouri.

CHAPTER X.
The Shame of Lottie May Doggett—and One Other.

COLONEL TODHUNTER and Mrs. Todhunter were two of the great throng that attended the grand reception and ball given by the Sons of Confederate Veterans at the Nuevech hotel.

The hotel dining room, festooned in bunting for the occasion, was doing duty as a ballroom, the Nuevech brass band was stationed upon a temporary platform at one end, and the members of the Nuevech Light Infantry, all Sons of Veterans, were there in full uniform.

Half an hour after the ball began Tom Strickland came to the colonel with a troubled face.

"Colonel," he said, "that little Lottie May Doggett is booked for a mighty unpleasant experience in a few minutes if somebody don't give her a friendly warning."

"What's the matter with Lottie-May now, Tom?"

"Well, sir, it's pretty serious. There's a ugly story about her that's got to the ears of the ladies tonight, some thing scandalous, in which the name of the man doesn't seem to be known, and I've just had a tip that she's going to be asked to leave the ballroom. It'll shame her beyond redemption, sir."

"Do you know the story?"

"Only as it's being whispered around. Colonel, about some man being seen to leave her house at hours of the night or early morning that can't mean but one thing, folks are claiming. I'm afraid Lottie-May's in a bad fix the way things look."

"You ain't mixed up in this trouble, are you, Tom?"

Tom Strickland flushed. "If I was, colonel," he replied, "I reckon I'd be man enough to try and get Lottie-May out of it myself without lettin' anybody else. No, sir, I ain't mixed up in it. But, good Lord, colonel, I want to school with Lottie-May when she wasn't knee high to a duck, and I swear I'd hate to see her publicly disgraced. And you know—and I know—it would hurt old Rafe Doggett so. It would break his heart, sir."

Colonel Todhunter made no reply. "I thought, maybe, if you could get the chance, colonel," resumed Tom anx-

SUCCESS

— Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still, but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.

— In business most men fail even to get a start, because they lack money.

— The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.

tously, "that you might tell her and so make it possible for her to slip away before the ladies can do what they're threatenin' to do, sir. She'll take it from you, knowing that her grandfather was in your old regiment and that you're tellin' her for her own good, where she might flare up and kick over the traces if anybody else hinted at such a thing. Don't you think you could work it, colonel?"

"If I do, Tom," replied Colonel Todhunter, "it'll be for old Rafe Doggett's sake. He's too good a man to be brought face to face with shame in his old age. Yes, I'll try to do it, Tom. But I'd like to wring the neck of the young rascal that's got old Rafe's granddaughter in such a mess, sir."

In accordance with this promise Colonel Todhunter found opportunity to speak with Lottie May Doggett. Very frankly he told her of the danger which she stood. The girl, clearly beautiful, apparently as conscious as some wild thing of the woods, flushed her hot resentment of his words.

"I ain't thankin' you for what you've just said, Colonel Todhunter," she cried, "it strikes me you're in mighty small business to come to me with this story."

"I reckon I am, Lottie-May," agreed Colonel Todhunter in all honesty. "But I wanted to save you and your old grandfather from shame, and that's why I done it."

"The girl's bosom was heaving with passionate anger. 'I'd just like to know who it was that got you to come and speak to me about it,' she exclaimed. 'Who was it, Colonel Todhunter? Was it one of them ladies what thinks I ain't good enough now? (Continued on page 6)

Farm Dairying

XVIII.—Cow Diseases. Second Article.

By LAURA ROSE,
Demonstrator and Lecturer in Dairying
at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

Copyright, 1911, by A. C. McClurg & Co.

LEAKY teats are caused either by weak muscels or because the teat opening is too large.

Treatment.—Throw and tie the cow. Insert a milking tube in the teat to preserve the milk duct.
With a sharp knife remove the skin from the end of the opening, making a good fresh wound. Draw the edges of the hole together with a few stitches, tying each stitch separately. Dress with a healing ointment.

This should be done when the cow is dry and is better to be done only by a veterinarian. If the leak be through a hole on the side of the teat scarify the edges of the opening with a sharp penknife when the cow is dry may cause the edges to unite.

To Cure a Sucking Heifer or Prevent Self Sucking.

Insert in the heifer's or cow's nose an ordinary bull ring. Just before in-serting the ring slip on it a harness ring the same size, which hangs loosely after the bull ring has been inserted.
This is a sure remedy.

Impaction of the Rumen or Paunch.

Cause.—The paunch becomes over-filled with solid food and its walls so paralyzed as to lose the power of contraction.

Symptoms.—Enlargement of abdomen, the drumlike sound is absent, and when the part is pressed the indurated remains for some time. The animal is dull, her breathing heavy, grunts and grinds her teeth.

Treatment.—Give a strong purgative
—one and a half to two pounds of salts and two ounces of ground ginger in two quarts of warm water. Follow up with two drams of nux vomica every six or eight hours until the bowels move freely. If the bowels do not move in eighteen to twenty-four hours give more salts. A little walking exercise helps the expulsion of the food.
In bad cases the cow is opened and the food removed by hand. This should be the work of a veterinarian.

Tympanitis or Bloating.

Cause.—Eating fermented grains, rank clover, especially when wet or with the dew on it; raw juicy potatoes, etc., may cause fermentation and the accumulation of gases.

Symptoms.—The abdomen distended, especially over the left flank; the walls of the belly elastic to the pressure of the hand and when tapped giving a hollow, drumlike tone; breathing labored.

Treatment.—If much distressed, prompt relief is afforded by puncturing deep on the left side into the flank four or five inches from the spine and midway between the last rib and the hip bone. This is best done with a trocar and cannula. If one is not at hand use a knife and insert a large goose quill or something of the kind to keep the wound open to allow the gases to escape.

Give from one to two pounds of epsom salts and an ounce of powdered ginger. Further fermentation may be prevented by a tablespoonful of chlo-ride of lime in a pint of water. In slight cases a dose of two ounces of oil of turpentine in a pint of raw linseed oil will generally dissipate the gases. No food should be given for twenty-four hours, and feed lightly for a day or two.

Impaction of the Third Stomach, or Fardel-bound.

Cause.—A diet of coarse, indigestible food and insufficient water to drink;
eating dried grass or leaves, etc.

Symptoms.—Refuses to eat; ceases to chew cud; in some cases slight diarrhea, followed by constipation; head carried low; dull, painful expression; stands still or lies down with head extended; gives a short grunt during expiration; advanced stages—staggering gait, impaired sight and sometimes symptoms of frenzy.

Treatment.—Same as for impaction of rumen. Assist the purgation by copious injections of warm soapy water three or four times a day. If the brain be affected, douche the head with cold water or apply ice.

Tuberculosis.

Symptoms.—A dry cough, without other constitutional disturbances indicates tuberculosis of the lungs. A cow losing flesh gradually and becoming generally anthrifty looking may have the disease in any organ. The only safe way to know if the herd be free from this very contagious disease is by having the animals tested with tuberculin.

If any react they should be put in a stable by themselves and the building where they have been kept disinfected.

If only slightly affected the animals may be fattened and sold to the butcher, for the meat is said to be wholesome.

The milk, especially if the udder be suspected of being diseased, should be scalded for the use of either man or beast. There is no known cure. The only way is to test the cows and keep those free of disease rigidly apart from the others. Drinking from the same trough, eating from the same stall, are easy means of spreading the disease.

If the cow be a valuable one and the disease is not deeply seated she may be kept for breeding purposes, but the calf must not be allowed to suck any of its mother's milk. If the cow's milk be thoroughly pasteurized it is then safe to feed.

Rheumatism.

Cause.—Exposure to cold and wet, especially when heated by driving.
Lying on cold floors or standing in a draft.

Symptoms.—If acute rheumatism sets in there will be loss of appetite, roughness of coat and dryness of muzzle, bowels constipated, urine high colored, joints swollen. The symptoms of chronic rheumatism are similar, but less severe.

Treatment.—Give two pounds of epsom salts and one ounce of ground ginger. Follow up with two dram doses of salicylic acid three times a day.

Put the joints well three times daily with camphorated liniment.

Keep the animal warm and dry.

Wounds or Cuts—Lacerated Udder.

First stop the bleeding by tying a bandage of clean muslin directly over the wound or above it. Often a bleeding artery will protrude. A thread can be run under it with a needle and the artery tied. After the bleeding stops cut off the ragged edges of muscels with scissors which have been dipped in an antiseptic solution. Then bathe the wound with an antiseptic wash.

Let nature do the healing. Keep the wound clean and free from germs by frequently bathing it with the antiseptic wash.

Sometimes a cow's udder is badly torn on barbed wire or brush. Thoroughly cleanse the wound with an antiseptic wash, using a syringe if one is at hand. Trim the rough edges and draw the cuts together with white silk thread, tying each stitch separately.
Leave an opening of an inch at the lowest point of the wound. Insert in this opening a small piece of cotton wadding to help carry away any discharge. Bathe the wound if necessary with a boracic or weak carbolic acid wash and renew the wadding. When healed remove the stitches.

Contagious Abortion.

Abortions being a contagious disease, the germs will lurk about the stables and infested animals for years.

Use some good disinfectant freely around the stalls, gutters, etc. Give

MAKING THE TUBERCULIN TEST.

each animal that has aborted forty drops of pure carbolic acid in one pint of water in its food three times a day until all vaginal discharge ceases.

As a preventive give the other cows the same dose twice a day for the same length of time.

Some dairymen dose their cows in this way with carbolic acid every two or three months just in case this dreaded disease might break out.

Another simple method, which can be used when cows are in pasture, is to mix thoroughly 100 pounds of barrel salt, powdered lime, and one pound of crude undiluted carbolic acid or four ounces of the acid to twelve quarts of salt. Give to the bulls and cows as one would ordinary salt.

Retention of the Afterbirth.

In case the afterbirth does not come away give a few doses of carbolic acid (forty drops), and no other assistance will be necessary.

Burying Diseased Animals.

When burying an animal which has died of any contagious disease put half a barrel of fresh lime over it.
Crystals of copper sulphate may be used. Burn all bedding, litter, etc., and whitewash the walls, stalls, etc., having some disinfectant in the wash.

Stock Foods—Tonics.

No. 1.—One pound ground gentian, a quarter of a pound of ground ginger, a quarter of a pound of powdered saltpeter and a quarter of a pound of powdered iron sulphate. Mix and give one tablespoonful in feed once daily for ten days, omit for three days and feed as above for ten days more. Cost, about 20 cents per pound.

No. 2.—Two pounds fenugreek, two pounds ground ginger, two pounds powdered gentian, two pounds powdered sulphur, two pounds potassium nitrate, two pounds resin, one pound cayenne pepper, eleven pounds dextrose meal, five pounds powdered charcoal, five pounds common salt and twenty-five pounds wheat bran. Cost, about $4.50 per 100 pounds. Mix well and feed the same as No. 1. This tonic is almost identical with the commercial mixtures.

Metaphorically Speaking.

"Let us nip this monster in the bud before it overwhelms us as an oncoming tidal wave," shouted the young politician.

"Perhaps," said an experienced em-pulverer in the back of the hall, "it would be better to strike it out of its lair before it becomes a festering can-ker."—Judge's Library

If you want real comfort in the home, especially for summer house-keeping, then use gas for cooking and heating water. While Charlevoix has no natural or city gas, the Charlevoix Hardware company, is handling the Blau gas system and you get the same results and satisfaction. If you want to see a real gas stove in Charlevoix, call upon the Charlevoix Hardware company and see the system and gas range there installed.

A "NOBLE CLOWN."

His Motive For Humbling Himself Before the Footlights.

Visitors to Paris who have recently wandered by chance into one of the cafe concerts, which are mostly frequented by that class who neither toil nor spin, must have been amazed and saddened by a very unusual music hall turn. Every night, between the "sacred mental tenor" and the "chanteuse leger," a mournful looking young man appears. He is greeted with derisive yells.

He sings, or tries to sing, a sentimental ballad and a comic song. He also imitates animals, the noises of tools and the whistling of locomotives.

The effect is so deplorable that the audience recently insisted on the "noble clown" apologizing for his lack of skill. He humbly advanced to the footlights and bowed to right, left and before him. Then, in a voice choked with sobs, he began to express his regret. With pathetic resignation he went down on his knees, offered profuse apologies for his lack of skill and promised to do his best to please them in the future.

Few who have seen this lamentable exhibition know its origin and excuse. This subject buffoonery is inspired by one of the noblest motives—filial love. This descendant of one of the oldest and noblest families in Venice was left alone, when very young, with his infirm and penniless mother. For many years they had lived on the charity of friends, but the old woman is now in such health that admission into an almshouse would be the only means of saving her life. But this cannot be obtained without payment of a certain sum, and her son is now employing the only means of procuring it open to him.—Paris Cor. Brooklyn Eagle.

Use Flick's fly chaser on your cows. Benj. Brown.—Adv. 281

Mirrors on Automobiles. That the mirror placed at the front of an automobile to enable the driver to see what is approaching from the rear may become a source of danger at night was recently shown by an accident to an English motorist. Driving at night, he was suddenly blinded by the glare of the lamps of a car approaching from the rear reflected to his eyes by the mirror on his own machine. A motor magazine suggests that the mirror be covered at night, but that this covering be a thin material that would prevent reflections of sufficient strength to dazzle the driver's eyes and yet would allow him to see in the mirror the lights of any vehicle approaching from the rear.

As Others Know Her. "She seems to be a natural flirt," he said. "Natural?" the woman impatiently replied. "There's nothing natural about her but the framework."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Cook With Gas

You can have all the conveniences of city gas by installing a Blau Gas outfit in your home.

Gas does the work. It simplifies and shortens the kitchen work. You don't have to bother about preparing the fire when you have gas for fuel, nor ashes and dirt to clean up when your through with it. Light it or turn it out is all there is to it.

Blau-Gas is a non-poisonous, non-asphyxiating gas.

Gives from Three to Five Times as much Heat as City Gas

Combustion is perfect—no soot or dirt to cling to cooking utensils. The only system which furnishes Gas cheaply enough to be used for cooking. Call and let us explain to you the merits of BLAU GAS.

Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

to associate with their daughters? I've got the right to ask you this, and I do ask it. Who sent you here, Colonel Todhunter?"

"It wasn't none of the ladies, Lottie May," Colonel Todhunter made answer without the slightest hesitation. "It was Tom Strickland. He heard what was goin' on, and he felt sorry for you, the little girl he went to school with when he was a boy. And it wasn't meddlin' on his part, either. It was plumb good heartedness."

The girl shivered as if she had been struck. "Tom Strickland?" she repeated, almost as if speaking to herself. "Tom Strickland—of all men! He's my kins' love to Miss Mary Todhunter, your own daughter. And he knows that I'd lay down and die for him any day he give the word. And it's Mrs. Todhunter that's been told of all this talk about me, and that's goin' to shame me here before all Nineveh! Oh, but it's a fine game you all are playin' to get me where I can't do no harm to Tom Strickland or to your daughter Mary, his sweetheart!"

She stood rigid, her hands clinched. Then swiftly she spoke again. "They shan't ruin me this way!" she cried. "Neither Tom Strickland nor Miss Mary Todhunter nor Mrs. Todhunter, nor you, neither! I'll bring you all to law. I'll make Tom Strickland come in for his share of my trouble. Since him and his sweetheart and his sweetheart's mother have set the ball a rollin', he's got to face the music along with me!"

"What do you mean?" exclaimed Colonel Todhunter.

All color had gone out of the girl's face as she spoke.

"I'll show you what I mean!" she half whispered, her fingers fluttering at her throat. "I'll show you! I ain't a good girl no more, Colonel Todhunter. I ain't fitten to breathe the same air with your daughter Mary. Tom Strickland and the rest of 'em's mighty anxious to get me out of the way. I'm a-goin', too. But not till I've said my little say to Mrs. Todhunter, sir. Not till then—not even if judgment day and hell itself come to me the next minute!"

"Stop that, Lottie-May!" cried Colonel Todhunter sternly. "You can't talk that way without reason—and you ain't got no reason to say what you've just said about Tom Strickland!"

For a reply the girl laughed in his face—and the next instant she had darted past him.

Her head high, her eyes flashing, her little hands clinched at her side, her frame all a-quiver with excitement, Lottie-May sped ominously to where Mrs. Todhunter stood with a group of other Nineveh ladies. Mary Todhunter standing close behind her mother.

"Mrs. Todhunter," said the outcast girl, her eyes defiantly holding those of the person whom she addressed. "I understand that you want me to leave this party because you think I ain't fitten to be here—that I'm a bad woman. Ain't that so, ma'am?"

Mrs. Todhunter was at first shocked into shrinking from the girl. Then she looked at her pityingly.

"Lottie-May," she replied, with a frank dignity, "I'm sorry you've made such a scene. It is true that we think you should not be here. But I was going to tell you this privately, to spare you as much as possible."

"No, you wa'n't!" interrupted the girl passionately. "You was a-goin' to put all the shame on me you could! But I'll say my say before you do it. Mrs. Todhunter. And I ain't denyin' anything, either, nor I ain't a-beggin' any of you for mercy. You're goin' to make me pay for my sin, ain't you—the sinful daughter of a sinful mother? But why don't you make the man pay at the same time, Mrs. Todhunter? That's what I'm asking you. Why don't you make the man pay, too?"

A dead silence followed these words. "Maybe you don't know who the man is?" inquired the girl. "Maybe you can't name him? Maybe that's the reason you ain't doin' nor sayin' nothin' against him?"

There was no reply. "Then I'll tell you who he is!" cried the girl. And at this her voice broke and her fingers again went fluttering to her throat. "I'll tell you his name! It's Tom Strickland, the man that wants to marry your daughter, Miss Mary Todhunter, ma'am—it's Tom Strickland, that's who it is!"

A piteous little cry came from Mary Todhunter. Lottie-May Doggett heard it and laughed. "Now you've got it good and plenty, —both of you—more'n you bargained for!" she cried tauntingly. Already she had moved toward the nearest door. Her reckless eyes were full of scornful defiance.

"Make the man pay, too!" she flung back at the group of which now a mother and her downward-averting daughter were the central figures.

The next moment she was gone. Colonel Todhunter saw Tom Strickland spring to Mary's side, catch her in his arms, and, thus holding her, face the group of women who had for so long stared at him.

The next moment Mrs. Todhunter had passed her own arms around the girl, letting her sink into a chair that had been brought. The mother's face was stern in condemnation.

"Why don't you make the man pay, too?"

"For shame!" she said to Tom. "You are not fit to touch her. For shame, sir!"

Tom Strickland's face grew white. His eyes, that had met those of Mary in mute entreaty, held Mrs. Todhunter's indignantly. For an instant he seemed about to speak. But the elder lady bent above her daughter, obviously ignoring him. The widening group of women looked at him with accusing eyes. Lottie-May Doggett's dreadful charge seemed still ringing in the air. Apparently bewildered, Tom Strickland turned away, his helpless glance resting for a breath of time on Mary's face. The shock and shame of what the girl had just heard were shown in the look that met his. Then she averted her gaze and Tom Strickland left her side, the women whispering behind him. He came direct to Colonel Todhunter.

"I must see you, colonel," he muttered, brokenly. "You heard everything, didn't you?"

The colonel nodded, studying the speaker closely as they moved away.

"What is it, Tom?" he asked. "What can I do for you?"

Tom Strickland laughed bitterly. "Nothing," he replied. "But I must tell you the only thing I can do for myself. I've got to see Stamford Tucker and choke the truth out of him!"

"What do you mean?" "I mean that he's got to tell the truth and face this scandal in my place. He is the one that's responsible, not I. God only knows what possessed Lottie-May Doggett to lay her disgrace at my door!"

Colonel Todhunter drew a quick sigh of relief. "If that's the truth, Tom, you're all right, and I must say I'm glad to hear it, because the case looks mighty ugly for you otherwise. I'll have to speak plainly, Tom, as Mary's father. If you've got the proofs that'll call Stam Tucker to time produce 'em right now."

The younger man looked the speaker to the face, a white hot anger in his eyes. Then suddenly doubt and something of dismay took the place of rage. At last he laughed mockingly, as if at himself.

"I haven't got a shred of proof," he said, "unless my own conviction. From what Lottie-May herself has told me, can give a hold on Stam Tucker that'll make him toe the mark. I've got the girl's word that Stam Tucker made love to her and that she met him in secret."

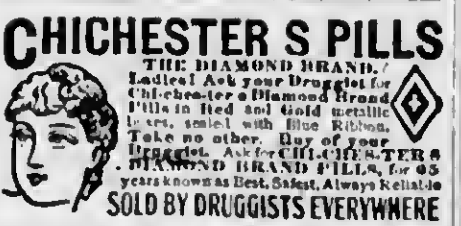

"And Lottie-May has just publicly accused you," commented Colonel Todhunter, a curious expression in his eyes as they rested upon Tom Strickland's pale face. "That's mighty poor evidence, Tom. The girl has made it worthless in advance. Nobody on earth would believe you."

Tom Strickland lifted one clenched hand and snatched it savagely into the open palm of the other.

"Nobody but Stam Tucker!" he cried. "He'll know it's the truth and he'll know that Lottie-May told me because she was trying to make me his rival. And he's got to confess that it's the truth—by God, I'll kill him if he don't!"

"Stop right there, Tom!" exclaimed Colonel Todhunter sternly. "You're makin' the biggest fool of yourself that's possible on all this earth to a man in your fix, suh!"

Marked Increase in the Attendance Last Sunday—
Speech of DeVoe Greatly Appreciated.

There was a marked increase in the attendance last Sunday and all who were there were richly repaid by the very enlightening talk given

Superintendent DeVoe of our schools. The insight he gave into the present trend of thought with reference to the methods and substance of educational training was very much appreciated and cannot help to do good in clearing away misapprehensions with reference to the conduct of the school work. If every parent having children in attendance on our schools could have been present, they undoubtedly would have gone away with a better impression both of the schools and the teaching force than they now have, and undoubtedly many wrong impressions would been corrected. Superintend.

ent DeVoe showed no mistake. ably that if the schools have heretofore been conservative, they are now getting into line and very much alive in the search for meth-

One Flying Boat to Be Here For Last Three Days of Week

TEN FLIGHTS WILL BE MADE

San Francisco Flyer to Arrive in City
This Afternoon

And is Booked to Make Three Flights Daily, Thursday, Friday and Saturday—Watch for Advertising

An air ship actually arrived in Charlevoix Monday afternoon at 1:35 and left the following morning at 9:23. This much we can say.

Friday was the day they should have arrived—not one, but at least five. It was promised the celebration, but the elements were against us.
At the very start of the Chicago-Detroit Hydro-Aero Plane race heavy winds delayed the departure of the flyers, and wrecked nearly all of those who did have the nerve to start. One boat reached Michigan City, the first control on the route, on the day scheduled. Since then they have made several flights and finally reached far north as Pentwater.

On the day the flyers were due to reach Charlevoix, Francis and Havens got as far as Pentwater, and Martin as far as Lake Harbor. Martin's machine broke down and Beckwith Haven and Francis were unable to continue the flight on account of the threatening weather.
There they stayed until Monday, when Beckwith Havens in a Curtiss boat, with its owner, J. R. Van Planck as passenger, took flight at about 2 o'clock Monday. They reached Frankfort, took on gasoline and left at 3:10, arriving at Charlevoix at 4:25, making one of the best flights in the history of aerial navigation. Their arrival at Charlevoix was announced by the blowing of whistles and ringing of bells. The boat made a beautiful landing in Pine Lake and was on the beach opposite the Chicago Club grounds during the night.

At 9:15 Tuesday morning, they again arose and resumed their trip north, arriving at Alpena for the first stop, and later in the day, making Harrisburg. The last reports state that they are at Bay City, laid up with engine trouble. Detroit, their goal, will undoubtedly be made on schedule time.

Martin, who was at Lake Harbor, started again Monday, but was forced to stop after reaching Ludington, from some trouble with his machine, and from what can be learned, will probably not make an effort to cover the proposed route to Detroit.

Friday's crowd in Charlevoix was the largest in its history. The flying boats and good roads tourists brought enormous crowds to the city. All day long the watchers were on the job, and many of them busy into the night. Everything was done to amuse the people.

Boat, canoe and swimming races were pulled off, bands played during the day and evening, the life savers gave an exhibition at the life saving station, base ball games were played—but no airships appeared, and hundreds went home disappointed. If the committee in charge could have made an air ship in the short time they would have done so, and there was not a member of the committee who would have hesitated in making a flight.
No blame can be attached to them for the airman not arriving.

But Charlevoix is going to make good her promises to have the flyers here—not five or six, but one—and if the plans now under way do not fall through, ten exhibitions will be given. The present plans are this: The Francis boat, which was stalled at Pentwater, is to be shipped to Charlevoix by express.
Upon its arrival here, the machine will be set up and an exhibition flight made. After the machine has been put into shape for flying and one flight made, then the committee will notify the people what is in store for them. But the machine must make good before any promises are made.

If everything turns out as anticipated, the Francis machine will make three flights a day, one at 10:30 a. m., 3:00 and 6:00 p. m., on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.
The committee in charge will issue no advertising nor make any promises until the machine has made an exhibition flight. The people and surrounding territory will then be notified, and an opportunity will be given them to see the flying machine on any of the days mentioned, the weather permitting. If the weather is bad on one day, and no flight made, they can come the second day and not be disappointed.

This fact can be taken into consideration, Francis, who will make the flights here, is from San Francisco. He came from there to Chicago to enter the contest. He built and owns his own machine and is a professional flyer. He will fill these dates if there is a possible chance to do so. Latest advices states that the machine will arrive on the 1:13 train this afternoon (Wednesday). Immediately upon his arrival the machine will be put together and an exhibition flight made. If all is successful, the three days' program, as given above, will be fulfilled to the letter.

Watch for the advertising, or phone any member of the committee for information.

Peoples Choice at Annual School Meeting Held Monday Evening.

Heating System Will Be Overhauled—Other Business Transacted.

From the number in attendance at the annual school meeting Monday evening, it was demonstrated that the people of Charlevoix take great interest in matters concerning our public schools, and the business transacted during the past year by the school trustees.

About a hundred men and women were present. R. W. Kane called the meeting to order, also stating that it was his intention, as well as other members, to fully explain all action taken by the board during the last year, and if there was criticism to be made, the time to make it was now, not later.

Reports were read by Secretary F.
J. Neech and Treasurer Olaf Nordrum, giving in detail all amounts expended during the past school year, indebtedness paid, and the balance now on hand. The reports show that over $3,000 of the bonded indebtedness of the school district had been paid, besides the number of improvements made.

A recommendation made by the board was certain changes in the present heating system, thus making an effort to reduce the fuel bill. After some discussion, the matter was left in the hands of the board, with power to adopt the best methods of overcoming the difficulty.

The matter of introducing manual training and domestic science into the schools was discussed, and when brought to a vote, lost out by a narrow margin, and will probably be introduced at a later date.

In the selection of a trustee for three years, the name of F. J. Neech, to succeed himself, and E. J. Hiller, were presented, and on the fourth ballot Hiller won out, the vote standing as follows: Neech 32, Hiller 30, scattering 4.

W. H. Miller made a motion to the effect that the proceedings of the board should be published in the Charlevoix newspaper, thus giving the people an opportunity of knowing all business transacted or contemplated. The motion was carried almost unanimously.

A nine months school year was decided upon. As near as can be estimated, the tax for the coming year will be about 7½ mills.

NEW KINKS IN ELECTION LAW

Important Changes in Election Methods
Found in the New Law.

Doing Away of Party Enrollment Saving of Several Thousands Dollars a Year.

There is considerable speculation in capital circles relative to the new law passed at the last session of the legislature, known as the James bill, which provides for the abolition of party enrollment.

That there are a number of kinks in the new law that will make themselves manifest ere long is assured by a close study of the new act.
There was at the last session and still is, for that matter, a prevailing opinion that the new law will make it more difficult for a new party to obtain recognition at a primary.
Such an opinion seems to be correct, for while the existing law provides that candidates of a new party for a state office may obtain the printing of the names upon the ballot by filing a petition signed by 300 qualified electors, the new law requires nomination petitions signed by at least 300 qualified electors.

The number of petitions required by any candidate remains the same as under the existing primary law, two per cent of the number of votes cast for secretary of state at the last preceding November election in the state, district, county, etc., as the case may be.

The prevailing opinion appears to be that by doing away with the party enrollment and providing for one primary ballot, so which is placed the tickets of all political parties, party lines, so far as the primary is concerned, have been eliminated. It is true that under the new law any elector may vote for candidates of any political party he may choose, but in so doing he cannot vote for candidates of more than one political party. For instance, if a Republican chooses to favor a candidate, but if he does so vote he is precluded from voting for any of his Republican friends.

The "15 per cent clause" which prohibited political parties from having the names of any candidates printed upon the election ballot unless such political party cast at the primary election at least 15 per cent of the vote cast by such political party for secretary of state at the last preceding November election has been eliminated.

Secretary of State Martindale says that by doing away with the party enrollment, a saving of several thousand dollars will be made each year. The cost of printing and binding enrollment books, the postage necessary to make returns to the secretary of state and county clerical assistance required in checking petitions of candidates, amounted to no small sum.

The qualification of an elector to participate in a primary election will only be to have his name properly registered, as is required for other elections. A qualified elector may be registered and eligible to vote at any primary election if he shall appear in person before the city or township clerk or other officer in charge of the registration book and take the oath required as to qualifications for registration.
A qualified elector may also be registered by the election inspectors on any primary day, by making oath or affirmation that he is qualified elector in the particular predict, and any person registering on any primary day shall be entitled to vote at the succeeding election without other registration.
There shall be no registration day for primary, general or city elections except as prescribed by the general election laws.

A somewhat novel provision is placed in the amendatory act to the effect that upon the expiration of the time for filing petitions in any primary for cities or counties, if it appears there is no opposition to any candidate for any office, then the city or county clerk shall certify to the election commissioner the name of such persons and such person shall be declared nominees for the respective offices and no primary will be held on such offices.

BEST CASH GRAIN CROP

Corn is Fast Becoming the Farmers Greatest Asset.

In Many Sections is Found a Far Better Crop
Than Wheat or Oats.

Corn is fast becoming one of our best cash grain crops. In many sections it is a far better crop than wheat or oats, yielding in money value fully twice as much as these small grain crops. Thorough cultivation of the corn crop is one means of securing a large and valuable crop. Every day in the field means fewer weeds, more moisture conserved, and more rapid development of the corn plants. The cultivation cannot be started too soon in the corn field after the corn is planted and up. It is often a good plan to give a light surface working just as the first stalks are pushing out of the ground. The sooner the work is begun, the greater are the chances of getting ahead and keeping ahead of the weeds.

If no harrowing is given by the young corn, the first cultivation should begin at least before the young plants are a week old. It is a good plan to start the work as soon as the green rows can be seen in a line across a small field.

Fenders on the cultivator will aid in holding soil and clods from covering young corn. However, not much attention need be given to uncovering young corn, as it will always push away small clods through the power of growth, even when completely covered up. It is better to give all the attention to other things and let the corn alone.
Some farmers seem to think that if a young corn plant is covered it will die. Such is not the case. Unless the plants are covered very deeply they will come out and straighten up without aid.

With the first and subsequent cultivation of corn, the full attention of the operator should be given to running the gangs and working the inner shovels as closely as possible to the rows. Getting out all weeds close to the hills is of the first importance. At the first cultivation the inner shovel may be run within an inch of the hills without injury to the corn. This will loosen the soil about the plants so that the surface will dry out and about the hills will die. Cut just as close to the corn the first time as you can and at subsequent cultivations work the gangs and shovels further away.

Corn, as with animals, must be kept growing without check from start to finish if it is to make a large and well-matured crop. Pushing its growth at an early stage is highly important in order that the plants early in the season may make a large and deep root system for absorbing the deep soil moisture as the season advances. For this reason the second and third cultiva-tions should follow closely after the first.

Run the shovels more shallow when the roots begin to fill the soil between the rows so that as few as possible will be torn out. Some work upon the theory that if deep cultivation is good for the first time, it is also good for later workings. But if the soil of the corn field is in good physical condition, there will be no need for deep working after the corn is more than 12 or 18 inches high. Deep working of the shovels may become necessary if rains interfere and weeds get a start, yet running the shovels deep when the corn is large and the roots have begun to fill the soil will result in more injury than good. By deep working in dry weather in large corn so many leading roots will be cut and corn torn out as to greatly weaken the plants.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

Fifteen Year Old Daughter of Rep. H. L. Mc-Millan Hit by Bullet

A 22-calibre rifle in the hands of a careless boy resulted in what may have resulted in a serious accident at East Jordan Tuesday afternoon.
Vera, the 15-year-old daughter of H. L. McMillan had been out rowing in a boat with some playmates, and as she was climbing from the boat onto the dock, was hit by a bullet from a rifle in the hands of a small boy who was shooting along the shores of the lake.

The bullet entered her right leg just back of the knee. Medical assistance was summoned, but the physicians, after probing for the bullet, were unable to locate it.

In charge of Drs. Parks and Varden, and accompanied by her father and mother, she was brought to Charlevoix, where an X-ray examination was made by Dr. R. B. Armstrong. The bullet was found located about a quarter of an inch from the bone above the knee joint.
Unless complications set in, no serious results will occur.

DEATH OF MRS. RIPLEY

Passed Away Tuesday Afternoon After Much Suffering.

Funeral Held Thursday at 2:00 from the Ho. e—
Was Highly Respected.

Mrs. Wright Ripley passed away at her residence, 103 Park Avenue, at 12:30 Tuesday of a complication of diseases, after suffering for over a year, at the age of 59 years.

The deceased was a pioneer resident of Charlevoix, coming here 25 years ago from Port Austin, Michigan. During her long residence here, she has made a host of friends and enjoyed the friendship and confidence of all who knew her, and her death is learned with the keenest regret by the entire community.
Her maiden name was Emma Kimball. She was united in marriage in 1878 at Port Austin to Wright Ripley. To them were born four children, Clarence—Eugene of Grand Haven, Roy, Addie and William of this city. She also leaves a brother, Frank Kimball of Port Huron, and a sister, Mrs. Ren Compton of Charlevoix.

She was a member of the Eastern Stars, Rebekahs and Lady Macabees of the World. She was also a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mrs. Ripley was a woman possessed of an enviable disposition, a good word for everyone she met and an ill word for none. A good neighbor and a conscientious Christian woman. It is no wonder that her friends are legion, and although she has passed from among them, her influence for right will long be felt in this community where she has lived.

The funeral will take place Thursday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock from the house, Rev. Quinton Walker, officiating. At the cemetery the services will be held under the auspices of the Eastern Stars. Burial at Brookside cemetery.

HOLD FIRST AUCTION

Lots at Pine Point Will be at Premium Before Season is Over.

The first auction of lots at Pine Point (North Charlevoix) will take place today and Thursday. Geo. W.
Fryhopper, who conducted the sales last season, will again be in charge.

Pine Point is one of the most beautiful building spots for summer homes in this section, and we predict before the season is over,
there will be but few left for sale, and those can only be obtained at a premium.

HELP ALONG GOOD ROADS

West Michigan Pike Tourists Given Enthusiastic Reception.

MET BY MANY LOCAL CARS

And Escorted Through City Amid Cheering and Honking of Horns.

Party Welcomed by Farmers Along Entire Route—Short Talks By Merritt Gibson and Earle.

With the honking of auto horns and the cheering of the passengers in the cars, the tourists of the West Michigan Pike dashed into the city downtown State street, to Park avenue, thence up Bridge street to the Elston hotel exactly on time Friday at noon.

About twelve tourists cars were in the bunch who came through from Traverse City, and were met six miles south of town by eighteen or twenty local cars, who acted as escorts to the city. After dinner the party left for Petoskey, where they spent part going to Harbor Springs and the balance to Pellston.
In the evening the return trip to Charlevoix was made, the party staying over night at the Elston.

Among those who were in the party were: Horatio S. "Good Roads" Earle, Frank F. Rogers, state highway commissioner, John I. Gibson, Frank Hamilton, Frank and A. V.
Friedrich, H. T. Blodgett, John R.
Santo, Frank R. Sadler and others of Traverse City; F. O. Twiekhman, John Metzinger, John Woodard,
Chris Jacobson, B. W. Schneider and Al Stutes of Frankfort; John Bradford of Arcadia; Dr. Wm. De-
Klem, president of the association,
Grand Haven; R. M. Hoffman, secretary, and J. E. Merritt of Manistee, besides many good road enthusiasts from neighboring towns.

The pilot car was driven by Horace Thompson, son of Wm. Thompson, editor of the Battle Creek Noon, who made the entire trip. Mr.
Thompson entertained the bunch at his summer home at Leland, and all spoke in glowing terms of the reception given them by Mr. Thompson.

Contrary to expectations, Governor Ferris was not with the party.
Lieutenant-Governor Ross was on the trip, but was obliged to turn back shortly after leaving Traverse City.

One of the features of the big demonstrations given them along the route was a monstrous automobile parade at Traverse City, with two hundred autos in line. The whole country side between Ludington and Charlevoix had been aroused, and people cheered the tourists at every farm. At Harbor Springs they were met by twenty-eight autos, and over five hundred people were present at the meeting in the afternoon.

About eight o'clock in the evening the party met on the vacant lot of the Green estate on Bridge street, where short addresses were made by several members.

E. Merritt of Manistee spoke briefly, stating that he had traveled over but few better roads than he had found in Charlevoix county. He also predicted that fruit lands in this section would go up to $1,000 per acre, and that the population and value of property would double in the next ten years.

John I. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, confined his talk chiefly to his field work, saying that the bureau was assisting good roads in every way it could. Mr. Gibson laid emphasis on the importance of the bureau's "Sunny-Ripe" guaranteed for all Western Michigan fruit. He showed that the guarantee already meant much abroad and that Manchester would this summer send two packers to show Western Michigan how to pick apples for an England market. He also pointed out promises for a good crop this year. "Nothing will keep the people on the land like good roads," he stated.

"I am glad to be in a county that has adopted the good roads system," said H. S. Earle in his opening remarks. "The old farmer's objection

MAY PROVE FATAL

When Will Charlevoix People Learn the Importance of It?

Backache is only a "simple" thing at first. But if you find it from the kidneys, that serious kidney troubles may follow. That dropsy or Bright's disease may be the fatal end. You will be glad to know the following experience.

"Tis the statement of a Charlevoix citizen. Mrs. R. M. McKel, 211 Mason St., Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly. I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. My body bloated quite badly and I had weak back and severe pains in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I obtained Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they have given me relief in every way."

"When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name." Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mrs. McKel had—the remedy backed by home testimony. See all stores, Foster-McIlwain Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Common Council

Council Chambers, July 14, 1913. The common council for the city of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Nichols presiding.

Aldermen present, Priest, Barney and Cartier. Absent, See and Powers.

Alderman Priest supported by Alderman Shapton moved the adoption of the following resolution.

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of the common council of the city of Charlevoix, Michigan, that the Federal Union Safety Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, has no license to do business in the state of Michigan.

And, whereas the said Federal Union Safety Company is the surety on the bond of Lee Howland, No. A. 111, dated October 28th, 1911, in the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars, in connection with the paving of Michigan, Dixon and Chicago Avenues.

And, whereas the life of the said bond is for a period of five years from date, and it is hereby resolved, that Lee Howland, the principal in the said bond be required to file a new bond with sureties to be approved by the common council of the city of Charlevoix.

And it is further resolved, that should the said Lee Howland after a new bond with a surety company as surety, that the said company shall be licensed and authorized to do business in the state of Michigan.

And it is further resolved, that the said Lee Howland be and is hereby required to furnish a new bond for the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars with sureties approved by the city of Charlevoix, running for the same term as bond No. A. 111 within fourteen days.

And it is further resolved, that the said Lee Howland shall file a new bond as aforesaid, and that upon its approval by the said common council, the City Clerk, be and is hereby instructed to surrender bond No. A. 111, dated October 28th, 1911, to the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars upon which the said Federal Union Safety Company is surety, property conveyed, to the Federal Union Safety Company of Indianapolis, Indiana.

Adopted at a regular meeting of the common council held on the fourteenth day of July, 1913.

Ernest J. Haller, City Clerk.

J. Fred L. Slaght, Deputy City Clerk for the city of Charlevoix, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution passed by the common council of the city of Charlevoix, at its regular meeting on the 14th day of July, A. D. 1913.

Fred L. Slaght, Deputy City Clerk.

Adopted at the regular meeting of the common council this 14th day of July, A. D. 1913 by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Priest, Barney, Cartier and Shapton. Nays, none.

Alderman Shapton supported by Alderman Barney moved the adoption of the following resolution.

Whereas this is the time for the hearing on the plan, plans, diagrams, specifications and estimates for the paving of Michigan Avenue with crushed rock and gravel, and it is hereby resolved, that the said plan, plans, diagrams, specifications and estimates be and are hereby adopted for the sum of $250,000, and that this resolution be published in the official newspaper as a notice for one week.

Adopted at a regular meeting of the common council this 14th day of July, A. D. 1913 by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Priest, Barney, Cartier and Shapton. Nays, none.

There being no further business the council adjourned.

E. J. Haller, City Clerk.

RECORDS WILL GO THIS YEAR

Michigan State Fair Will Be Greatest Ever Held.

PREMIUMS TOTAL $100,000.

Increased Interest Shown by Exhibitors—Program Entertaining as Well as Instructive—Lofty Aim of Management.

THOSE in a position to know are unanimously predicting that the 1913 State Fair will surpass anything of its nature ever before staged in Michigan by an enormous margin. It will be Michigan's greatest agricultural and industrial exposition. All the plensibus features of last year's fair will be emphasized to a greater degree and new ones introduced that cannot help but meet with the sound endorsement of progressive Michiganders. Fair week will be from Sept. 15 to 20.

The educational efficiency of the fair will be elevated to a far greater extent than in previous years, and the entertaining and instructive standards will be higher.

All of the big attractions are not ready for announcement as yet, but there is positive assurance that 1913 State Fair visitors will be furnished with the most sensational and at the same time most instructive entertainments ever exhibited in the west.

There will be actual working demonstrations at this year's State Fair which will be of great practical value to every class of people. These exhibitions will convey knowledge to thousands of persons who could not possibly obtain it without the expenditure of thousands of dollars.

No matter in which direction a visitor cares to focus his view at the coming fair, he will observe something worth seeing and thinking about. It will be the state's show window stocked with the resources of one of the richest commonwealths in the Union.

$100,000 Premium List.

The premium list alone, that of $100,000, is in itself enough to justify the success of the 1913 Fair. This amount is far in excess of that offered by any similar institution of the same size in existence.

This huge sum of money will be devoted toward encouraging production along the lines which will help solve the many problems which confront farmers and the business interests which are dependent upon agricultural productions.

It is the resolve of a thoroughly organized and smooth working management to make the 1913 Fair a powerful factor in the improvement of live stock, farm efficiency and country citizenship. Clean, substantial information and entertainment for all classes and all ages will be the lofty aim of those in charge of Michigan's greatest Fair.

The number of exhibitors, which can be taken as a good barometer of healthy growth, is now far ahead of last year's army. With the premium list first circulated the needs of the various departments are confident in bigger and better exhibits. Even this early adequate space for exhibitors is a problem.

In short, the management will endeavor to supplant the idea that the Michigan State Fair, Sept. 15 to 20, is going to be a superficial entertainment or a home of country vaudeville and show the visitors that it does and will continue to exert a broadening influence throughout the length and breadth of the fairest state in the Union.

G. W. Dickinson, General Manager of the Michigan State Fair.

ABOUT thirty-one years ago the shrill warning shriek of No. 8, as she rounded the bend caused a robust, overbuilt boy who had been engaged in the occupation of trailing Old Dobbin up and down endless rows of evergreen to desist in his exciting task until the steel sled galloped around the curve.

As this was a bit too early for the advent of the Empire theater, with its new and exclusive wild west film (approved by the national board of censorship)—last five rows reserved for ladies who do not wish to remove their hats, there was nothing for the boy to do that night except to become drowsy and dissatisfied with his lot. Before he took the candle up to bed he had decided on his course. He would be a railroad man. He hadn't quite made up his mind whether he wanted to be a superintendent or general manager, but that could be decided on later.

Seven years have passed, and that boy, now a young man, is an expert telegraph operator. He is directing the course of those steel fliers he used to so fondly view from the corral.

He soon got so to know the business so thoroughly that a Michigan railroad corporation thought he would make a crackjack superintendent of its road. He did.

When Governor Warner was casting around for a competent state railroad commissioner he hit upon a practical man for the job—George W. Dickinson. He justified the governor's confidence.

Recently the Michigan State Agricultural Society concluded that it wanted a man at the head of the Michigan State Fair who was able to substitute a little efficiency for haphazard management. The fair needed an expert business doctor. One of its directors and an ardent enthusiast, George W. Dickinson, was prevailed upon to accept the thankless job.

Those same forceful methods which enabled George Dickinson to rise out of the obscurity of a Sault Ste. Marie county farm to emphasize success in the business world are already manifesting themselves in the general management of the Michigan State Fair.

The Difference Between "The Summer Girl" and "The Summer Woman."

AUTO INCREASES DEMAND.

Superintendent Endicott Says Saddle Horses Are Coming Back.

"Never before since my connection with the Michigan State Fair has there been such a ready response from western breeders in the matter of assisting the management to arrange special features and novelties for the 'Night Horse Show' of 1913," said Superintendent John Endicott of Detroit.

"There is an idea abroad that the coming of the automobile has dampened the enthusiasm of the people for blooded horses. Undoubtedly the motor driven vehicle has cut down the demand for the coach horse, but there is no question in my mind but that it has increased the demand for fine saddle horses."

"The proposition is simply this. The business man puts his auto to every use and hence does not get the exercise he realizes he requires. To make up for this inactivity men have taken to the saddle horse and find that a stiff canter affords plenty of pleasure and lights off the weight accumulation of increasing years."

"We already have assurance that some of the best fine and saddle horse breeders of the country will try for the rich awards of the 'Evening Horse Show' at the Michigan State Fair Sept. 15-20."

BETTER HORSES FAIR'S SLOGAN

Larger Incentives Offered in Light Stallion Classes.

CAVALRY HORSES TO SHOW

Manager Dickinson Says Michigan Breeders Can Reap Rewards From War Department—Military Jumpers to Perform.

BY offering much bigger incentives for the breeding of horses suitable for service in the United States army the Michigan State Fair believes it is accomplishing a double purpose.

Through breeding mounts up to the United States army requirements the farmers are enabled to get bigger prices for them and at the same time elevate the standard of Michigan bred animals.

The dearth of the proper kind of animals for army service has been a problem for the war department has been up and down for the last few years and with little prospect of a comprehensive solution. The farmers all over the state of Michigan have taken largely to the breeding of heavy draft horses for farm and city use. This exclusion of the light, strong horse for military service has naturally cut down the supply to an alarming extent. It has come to pass where the government is forced to assist the farmer in breeding in order to increase the number of desirable animals. The same sort of action under the government demands also comes under the saddle horse and light harness class, so that any encouragement of this style of horse will not necessarily mean but one market for the distribution of the improved products.

General Manager Dickinson of the State Fair is asking the war department to send a troop of typical cavalry horses to the 1913 Fair so that the breeders may become familiar with the style desired. A good war charger must be a fine jumper, and so one of the special night features of this year's Fair will be the vaulting in the military class.

"We know that Michigan farmers can supply part of the demand of the government for cavalry animals as well as the western states do," said General Manager Dickinson. "It means bigger profits as well as carrying out the patriotic side of the question. Government experts assure us that they are highly pleased with our idea to encourage the breeding of horses fit for army purposes."

Colonel
of Missouri.

"Fool or no fool," cried Tom Strickland, "I'm not going to let this thing lay at my door when I know the guilty man, and know, besides, he wouldn't ask nothing better'n for Miss Mary to throw me over on account of this so that he could marry her. That's the situation, Colonel Todhunter, and no man fit to be called a man would let Stam Tucker go free!"

"If you go lookin' for Stam Tucker now, Tom," said Colonel Todhunter quietly, "there'll be a shootin' scrape in less'n two minutes after you two come together and somebody's mighty apt to get killed. If it's you, the d-d cutty ain't helped you any that I can see. If it's Stam Tucker, then you're worse off'n ever, because he'll be dead and you'll be held for killin' him and Lottie-May Doggett's accusation will stand against you. Have some sense, my boy, before it's too late."

Tom Strickland laughed at the words. "I'll have some sense," he retorted. "I'll see that Stam Tucker don't profit by this thing. And there's only one way to see to it—and that's by having it out with Stam Tucker himself and making him tell the truth. You can't interfere in this matter, sir, even though you are Miss Mary's father. No third party can take a hand in it, sir."

Colonel Todhunter contemplated the speaker earnestly for a moment. That he nodded.

"You're right, Tom," he conceded. "I reckon you're Stam Tucker'll have to sift this out between you, and I ain't nobody else can lift a finger. But I've just got one favor to ask of you before you go any further, my boy."

"What's that, sir?" asked Tom.

"I don't mean to be disrespectful, colonel, and I'm willing to meet you as far as I can, but you see now just how things are between Stam Tucker and me."

"I'm not saying another word," answered Colonel Todhunter. "The only thing I want you to do, Tom, is not to go lookin' for Stam Tucker tonight. In the first place, he's right here, and you ain't got no business ruinin' the chance of providin' a serious person—doubtless where there's women, and in the second place, you'd better get a night's sleep for your own good. Tom, I'm talkin' plain to you, my boy, because a good deal depends on it. The chances are a million to one that there'll be some shootin' before you and Stam Tucker get through with your argument, and a cool head and a steady hand are mighty useful things to have at such a time."

"I'm cool enough, sir," replied Tom Strickland.

But the colonel shook his head. "Tom," he said, "I want you to promise me to go quietly home right now and go to bed. After tonight the game's in your own hands, and you can play it any way you see fit. This is all I ask of you. Go home and get a good night's rest, Tom. There was just the least shake in the speaker's voice."

Tom Strickland hesitated.

"Go home, Tom," said Colonel Todhunter. "I wouldn't be a true friend of your father if I let you take any foolish chances in an affair of this kind. And I'm thinkin' of Mary, too, when I say this. You go home now."

The colonel's grim lips were trembling a little.

Tom Strickland nodded. "All right, colonel," he spoke finally. "I'll go home. I won't try to do anything further until tomorrow, sir."

"That's all I ask, Tom," replied the colonel.

But he saw to it that the younger man got away from the perilous scene without being subjected to temptation that might compel him to break his word. And then, knowing that Tom Strickland was safely on the road home, Colonel Todhunter looked up Sin Birdsong without losing a moment's time.

"Sin," he said, "I want you to see Stam Tucker tonight without fail and tell him not to come into town tomorrow. Just say this to him—that Tom Strickland's lookin' for him on account o' this here Lottie-May Doggett business and there's a goin' to be trouble if they meet, and then you come back here and tell me what he says. I'm tryin' to prevent a shootin' scrape, Sin, and this is the only way I can see to do it."

"All right, colonel," replied Sin. "I'll look up Stam Tucker right away and deliver your message, then I'll report to you mornin', sir."

"I'll just be eternally condemned," commended Colonel Todhunter to himself when Sin had departed on his mission. "If any other man meddled in a serious private difficulty of mine like I'm meddlin' in this of Tom Strickland's I'd tell him in pretty plain language what I thought of his interference, even if I was engaged to his daughter. But I ain't got no choice in the matter. I want to save Tom and keep Mary's heart from bein' broken."

and I want to save old Bill Strickland from such a tragedy as this would be, and I've got to take the bull by the horns to do it. I'll keep those two young fools apart if I've got to break my neck a-doin' it!"

Sin Birdsong was not gone long. "Well, colonel," he said upon returning, "I've just seen Stam Tucker and told him what you said, and he told me to say to you that he wouldn't come in town at all tomorrow. Says he don't want to have any trouble with Tom Strickland now if he can help it, because it would be serious trouble, and he ain't in the humor for it just at present."

"Sin," asked the colonel, "what did Stam do or say when you told him that it was on account of Lottie-May that Tom was lookin' for him?"

"Colonel Todhunter," replied Sin, "he got white clean to his lips. I never saw a man's face go white as quick as his. But he didn't make no comment on that part of the message, sir. He just stood still for a minute when I got through, and then he told me what I've just said to you."

A look of deep relief sprang into Colonel Todhunter's face. "That's all right, then," he spoke. "And it tells me what I wanted to know. Now, Sin, I'm goin' to ask you if you can't contrive some plan that'll take Stam Tucker away from Niveveh and keep him away for a few days at least. If we can do that, Sin, we may be able to prevent the trouble altogether."

Sin Birdsong looked at the speaker with something of helpless bewilderment in his honest eyes. Then, suddenly, his face brightened.

"I reckon, I've got it!" he exclaimed. "Some of the boys was arrangin' this very night for a fishin' frolic down on Black Bottoms lake, and they planned to start before sunrise day after tomorrow. I'll make you count Stam Tucker in on the deal, and I'll go out to the Tucker's and give him their invitation myself tomorrow and see that he consents to go. Then, colonel, all we've got to do is just keep him and Tom apart for one day and night—and we've turned the trick!"

"Butly for you, Sin!" approved the colonel. "It begins to look like we can see this thing through to a sensible finish, and that's a blamed sight more than I looked like to me a few minutes ago, I can tell you!"

CHAPTER XI.
Tragedy on the Road.

SHORTLY after noon the next day Colonel Todhunter stepped in at the Stricklands' on his way home, as was not unusual for him to do. In reply to an apparently careless question, Margaret Strickland, Tom's eldest sister, told him that Tom had gone into town soon after breakfast.

Colonel Todhunter returned into Niveveh at once, after explaining to Margaret Strickland that he had forgotten to execute certain housekeeping missions for Mrs. Todhunter before driving out. But he found no trace of Tom Strickland until he came to a certain barroom frequented mainly by the Yankee and Tucker factions in politics.

"Colonel," said the bartender, in answer to a question, "Tom Strickland was in here, sir, about two hours ago, lookin' for Stam Tucker. Not drinkin' and waitin' here quite awhile in hopes of his turnin' up, he wrote a note you'd at that table and sent it out by one of the town boys to Stam's house. Then he went away, sir."

"Have you any idea where he went?" The bartender hesitated for a moment. Then, "Well, Colonel Todhunter," he said at last, "I believe, from the way he was talkin', that he went to see that girl, Lottie-May Doggett, that the scamp's about now, sir. He was drinkin' pretty heavy, colonel, and he talked pretty threatenin' about Stam Tucker, and it seemed to me that the two things was connected in some way—his trouble with Stam and his trouble with the girl. I'm inclined to think there's a difficulty brewin', colonel."

Leaving the barroom, Colonel Todhunter drove directly out to old Lottie-May's place. Neither the girl nor her grandmother was at home. Returning into Niveveh he encountered Sin Birdsong, who were an anxious face.

"I've just seen Stam Tucker, sir," cried Sin. "We weren't a bit too soon in layin' our plans to prevent trouble Colonel Todhunter. He's just got a note from Tom Strickland tellin' him to come into town tonight if he don't want to have serious trouble at his own home instead, so it's plain that Tom Strickland's on the warpath, sir."

"What's Stam Tucker goin' to do?"

"He ain't goin' into town, colonel. He told me that he had an engagement to call on a young lady, so he wouldn't be at home anyway if Tom came there lookin' for him, and, besides, he says he'll do most anything to prevent trouble just at this time. He's as anxious to get away on that fishin' frolic as we are to have him get away, Colonel Todhunter."

"I'm powerful glad to hear it," commented the colonel. "Well, with Stam Tucker not goin' into town and not stayin' at home and Tom Strickland not knowin' where he's found, I reckon things are pretty tolerable safe for tonight. But don't you fail to get Stam off on that fishin' jaunt before daybreak tomorrow, Sin."

"I won't, sir," promised Sin Birdsong earnestly. "I'll get him if I have to drag him by the scruff o' the neck!"

Arising early the next morning, Colonel Todhunter drew in a deep breath of fresh air, grateful of soul.

"Thank the Lord!" he said to himself. "Stam Tucker's gone with Sin and the other boys, and we've got a few days' breathin' time anyway before there's any further danger."

But even as Colonel Todhunter thus spoke young Stamford Tucker lay dead at home. He had been shot the night before, and Tom Strickland now was held a prisoner in the little Niveveh jail accused of his murder.

A messenger bearing these dreadful tidings arrived as the colonel stood on the front gallery enjoying the freshness of the morning. He came from Tom Strickland himself.

Colonel Todhunter received the news in silence, his gray brows bent until his eyes were but two glints of metallic blue gray beneath his grim lip set in a terrible line.

"Tell Tom I'll be with him right away," he said at the story's completion. "And tell him to keep his courage up—I'm goin' to do everything I can for him."

Nevertheless the colonel's own heart was heavy for Mary's sake, for Tom's dire peril and knowin' well that it would all come near to breaking the heart of Colonel Bill Strickland, his lifelong friend. But it was no time to sit in cold judgment upon Tom's sin. The boy must receive all the help that was in the power of mortal man to give.

Halting a moment at the Niveveh hotel to send a telegram to the Niveveh William J. Strickland, now himself campaigning in northern Missouri, Colonel Todhunter then hurried to the jail. The moment his eyes fell on Tom Strickland's face he knew that the lad had been drinking heavily. The two clasped hands and stood facing each other in silence. At last the colonel spoke.

"Tom," he said, "I want to tell you at the start that I'm goin' to accept every word you say as gospel, and I want you to tell me the whole truth. Then while we're waitin' for your father to get here I'll know better what to do in beginnin' arrangements for your defense. You must tell me the God's truth, my boy."

Tom Strickland's plucky eyes, unflinching, though still bloodshot from overnight drinking, held those of the speaker in a level glance.

"I'll tell you the truth, colonel," he answered. "I won't vary from it by a hair if I know it."

"How did the meetin' between you and Stam Tucker come about, Tom?" asked Colonel Todhunter. "Tell me just when and how you killed him."

"Colonel," replied Tom Strickland, "I have no recollection of killin' Stam Tucker last night. I don't even remember meetin' him."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean that I started out to meet Stam, and that it was my intention to kill him if he didn't publicly tell the truth about him and Lottie-May Doggett, but I ain't clear in my mind as to what happened after I left Nick Bledsoe's barroom. I got to drinkin' there, thinkin' while I was waitin' for Stam Tucker to keep an appointment that I made by letter, and I got tired waitin' for Stam to show up, so I started out to go to his house, seein' as how he wouldn't come to the place I had named. This much I remember, and I've got a confused recollection of waitin' about the edge of town, but the first thing I remember with any distinctness after leavin' Nick Bledsoe's, is findin' myself in the Niveveh hotel barroom drinkin' again. Whatever happened between is gone from my memory. I was drinkin' hard, Colonel Todhunter, and that's all there is to it. I started drinkin' because I had lost—well, I didn't care what happened to me, sir," Tom concluded.

"You were armed, of course, when you went to meet Stam and have it out with him?"

"Yes, sir; I had my pistol on me."

"Well, then—well, then, Tom—when you were arrested this mornin' after Stam Tucker's body was found on the side of the road halfway between his home and the town, what story did your own tell, boy? If you had had a shootin' scrape drinkin' that time your weapon would have said so—a man in your condition, with this difficulty settled, wouldn't have released his gun. What is yours in, Tom?"

"That was the first thing the deputy sheriff looked at when he placed me under arrest," said Tom Strickland, his eyes dumbly perplexed. "Colonel Todhunter, one chamber of my pistol was empty. I reckon I must surely have used Stam on the road and killed him."

"Tom," said Colonel Todhunter, at most pleadingly, "whatever way Stam Tucker was killed he got one shot at the man that killed him. His own weapon was a-lyin' right at his hand when they found him, and one bullet had been fired from it. In God's name, my boy, if you was that other way, you must have some sort of recollection of the shootin' scrape. It's the truth of how Stam Tucker came to his death. If you killed him we've got to know it, because the whole line of defense has got to be based on absolute knowledge of the truth of whether or not it was you that shot and killed Stam Tucker last night. Dig down in your mind, Tom. My God, boy, you've got to remember everything you did every minute of the time you say you was out lookin' for Stam Tucker!"

Tom Strickland drew a deep breath.

"It must have been me that killed him," he said. "I was on my way to do it. And who else wanted to kill him? But I can't remember anything about it, Colonel Todhunter. I'd be glad if I could."

Colonel Todhunter sat helpless for a moment. Finally, "Did you go home after the hotel bar was closed?" he asked.

"No, sir. I slept at the hotel last night."

"What time were you arrested?"

"About 6 o'clock."

"Yesterday afternoon, when you had been to Nick Bledsoe's barroom for the first time, did you then go out to see Lottie-May Doggett, as you told Nick you was goin' to do?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you see her?"

"Yes, sir. I asked her to tell the truth and acknowledge that I had

SPEED EVENTS ARE ARRANGED

Three Day Fair Program Will be the Best Ever Held.

Educational and Fine Arts Building to be Erected —Price Superintendent.

The speed committee of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society met at the secretary's office in East Jordan last Wednesday, to make arrangement for all speed events for the coming fair this fall.

Those present were William Mears, chairman; Nat Burns, William Byers and Leroy Sherman.
Matters pertaining to speed events were thoroughly discussed and the following program was decided upon:

Wednesday, September 10th.
Purse
Novelty Race, 1/2 mile walk.
1/2 mile trot, 1/2 mile go as you please..... $25.00
2:40 class, trot or pace..... 100.00
2:10 class, trot or pace..... 150.00
Thursday, September 11th.
2:30 class, trot or pace..... 100.00
2:25 class, trot or pace..... 150.00
1/2 mile running race..... 50.00
Friday, September 12th.
2:30 class, trot or pace..... 100.00
Free for all..... 250.00
1/2 mile running race..... 50.00

These events, of course, are subject to change by the committee, in case conditions should arise later in the season.

The same evening the executive committee met and other matters were discussed. It was decided that the association should erect an educational and fine arts building. Robert Price was also appointed to act as superintendent of its construction.

Preparations are being made to make the fair of 1913 the biggest and best ever held in the county.

against good roads—that he would have to shoe his horses—has passed away and today nobody objects any more. The only question is, who is going to pay for the road.
"Bill had a bill board and he sold his bill board to Jake to pay his board bill. Jake bought the bill board and advertised his business on it. Now Bill is working for Jake."
The way to advertise Michigan is to build good roads, for that is the only way you can show the people of Chicago and other cities what you have up here. The one fault with Michigan people is they do not blow enough about themselves. You have every agricultural chance, and your apples are better than those in the west. All you need is to blow a little more." He was listened to intently, for he has fathered this movement from the very start and has so persistently kept it that now Michigan is traversed almost from one end to the other with good roads, and more of them are being planned for each year. He related many instances where the development of a district has been greatly hindered by impassable roads, and urged all to be a good road booster.

The party left Charlevoix at 6:30 Saturday morning on their return trip, speaking at various points along the route.

Bay View Letter.

The twenty-fourth annual Assembly will open at Bay View on Thursday evening, July 17th with a grand concert by the famous singing band, the Huskars, admission to this entertainment being free to the general public. Every effort has been made to make this year's program the most popular and instructive ever heard here. For the next four weeks at every available hour during the day a rich and varied program of music, lecture and entertainment will be provided. The price of the entire course has been kept the same as in preceding years, $3.00 for the season ticket or an average cost of less than three cents per engagement.

The star engagement of the first week will be the lecture of the world-famous detective, William J.
Burns. He will tell of his wonderful experience in the McNamara dynamiting case, the Pacific land fraud case and the great San Francisco graft case, in which his adventures have been of the most sensational kind. The Burns engagement is set for Monday evening July 21st.

The Bay View Summer University opened Monday with one of the largest enrollments in its history, but there is still opportunity for others who may wish to enroll. Of special interest to the public is the conservatory of music, which is manned by the finest talent of the well-known Conservatory of Oberlin College.—Adv. 201

MAKE FIRST APPLE EXHIBIT

Western Michigan Development Bureau to Exhibit at Cleveland.

Purpose of the Exhibit is to Show Development —and Condition of Apples.

The Western Michigan Development bureau will make its first apple exhibit for the current year at the fourth annual apple show to be held by the International Apple Shippers' association in connection with its 10th convention in the city of Cleveland, August 6 to 8. This association has offered four sets of prizes in addition to a silver cup, for the best and most comprehensive exhibits of commercial varieties of apples as representing the different sections and states. These exhibits are to be composed of not more than five varieties of summer apples, ten varieties of fall apples and fifteen varieties of winter apples. Michigan comes in the first class and it is grouped with the following states and provinces: Ontario, Nova Scotia, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island,
New York, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The general purpose of the exhibit is to show the development and conditions of the commercial varieties of the various sections, on the first of August. Of course, it is true that fruit will not have reached its maturity by this time, and allowance is made in passing upon the various exhibits for the backwardness of certain sections because of unfavorable weather conditions. In other words the difference in seasons in the various states is fully taken into consideration by judges in making their awards, so that every section is on equal footing regardless of whether or not its fruit is full grown.

The apple show is open to the world. Everyone is welcome, growers, dealers, consumers association, selling associations. It makes no difference whether fruit on exhibit is raised by the exhibitor or not, or whether it came from a single orchard or from several orchards. It must, however, be exhibited as the product of the state where it was actually grown.

The Development bureau proposes to ask all the good apple growers in its territory to thin branches on their best trees and to send their largest and finest specimens to the Little Son of James Ackert Fractured Skull

While Playing

While playing around the yard about ten days ago, Hubert, the 14 year old son of James Ackert ran into a door, injuring him slightly, but not noticeable. From that time until Thursday he went daily to the golf grounds and worked as a caddie.

Thursday morning he started for the golf grounds, but was obliged to return, stating he was feeling very ill. He reached home and shortly afterwards became unconscious, and has since been in that condition. Upon examination by Dr. Armstrong it was found that he was suffering from a fractured skull, and latest advices are that there are but little hopes of his recovery.

BREAKFAST OMELETS.

CREAMY omelets give zest to the morning meal. They tempt the appetite of those who are apt to slight the first food of the day. They are just the things for those who complain of no appetite for breakfast. Some suggestions for nourishing omelets are given here:

A Plain Omelet.

Browned Omelet.—Take four eggs, four tablespoonfuls of milk, one-quarter teaspoonful of salt and a dash of pepper. Mix the beaten yolks of the eggs with milk and seasoning. Fold into this the stiffly beaten whites. Pour into a hot skillet in which a little fat has been melted. Cook with a very low fire until brown on the underside. Dry in the oven.

Fish and Eggs.

Fish Omelet.—Take a level teaspoonful each of flour and butter and cook them together. Add gradually one cupful of hot milk and a little pepper. Soak over with one heaping cupful of codfish cut in small pieces. In the morning cook until soft that it may shred easily. Mix with thickened milk. Then mix the whole with one pint of cold boiled potatoes chopped fine. Put a tablespoonful of butter in a spider. When hot turn in the fish and cook slowly until a thick brown crust has formed; then fold over and turn out on a hot platter. Garnish with fried bacon and parsley.

A Vegetable Novelty.

Potato Omelet.—Take one table spoonful of drippings and one table spoonful of grated onion. Add, chopped, the potatoes which are left over from dinner. Place in an iron pan. Dust with one teaspoonful of salt and one-eighth teaspoonful of white pepper. With cake turner or spatula keep turning the potatoes until they begin to brown. Do not add the drippings. Beat four eggs with four tablespoonfuls of cold milk. Pour over the hot brown potatoes and mix well. Let set for a minute; then double like an omelet by pushing the potato into half the pan. Turn out on hot platter sprinkled with chopped parsley and garnish with sprigs of parsley.

Baked Omelet.—Beat the yolks of four eggs until lemon colored with one-half teaspoonful of salt. Add one cupful of milk and the stiff beaten whites of the eggs. Pour in greased pan and bake in moderate oven twelve minutes.

CHILDREN TAKE PART

Charlevoix Youngsters to Occupy Conspicuous in Colonial Wedding.

A large number of children are rehearsing the Colonial Wedding, which is to take place at the Congregational church, Friday evening of this week.

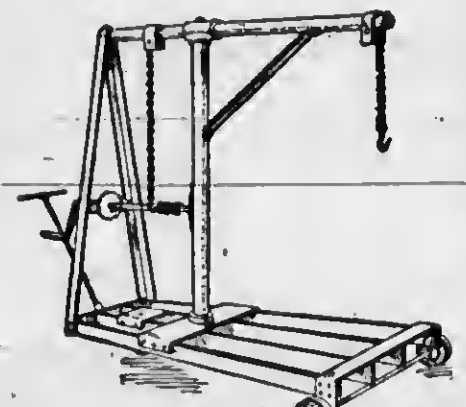

No one should fail to see this wedding, as it is very beautiful and promises to be the event of the season.

Among those taking part are Col. Effingham, master of ceremonies, Kenneth Jacobs, Gen. Washington, Clayton Hull, Mrs. Washington, Catherine McDonald, the bridegroom, Edmund Bandalpe, Gilbert Saltonstall, who by the way is a direct descendant of Gen. Gordon Saltonstall, a brigadier general under Washington. The bride, Mary Curtis, is represented by Henrietta Baldwin. Neither the bride or groom are over 5 years of age and the minister, Rev. Mr. Van Kregan, who will perform the ceremony will be represented by Earl Coulter, and other youngsters.

HANDY FOR THE GARAGE.

Portable Automobile Crana Made of Scrap Material.

A crane for use in a garage can be easily constructed of scrap material picked up about the shop. It is made principally of gas pipe and angle iron. The base is five feet long, three feet wide at one end and eighteen inches at the other. It is built of four pieces of one-half by three inch iron bars. The upright post is a three inch gas pipe, six and one-half feet long, set in a collar fastened to a cross plate of one-half by six inch metal.

The narrow end of the base has a V shaped brace made of one and one-half inch angle iron. The three inch by six inch of the upright is forced out to fit the arm of the crane, which is also a three inch gas pipe. An inch and a quarter shaft constitutes the drum, which is passed through bearings in the V shaped angle iron brace and on the upright. A crank and ratchet is attached to the outer end to facilitate the hoisting.

Two straps of metal, each one-quarter by four inches, are shaped similar to a horseshoe and placed over the top of the crane arm, one at the end and the other central between the upright post and the end brace. A pulley is placed between the ends of these straps and a hole cut on the under side of the pipe to allow the chain to enter the pipe.

Such a crane will easily lift one end of an automobile and is very handy for removing the power plant or transmission to make necessary repairs.

A FRAUD DISCOVERED

By DAVID WALTER CHURCH

Rose Thornton and I were school mates and chums. I say chums because we were very young and at that time our friendship had not ripened into love. Rose's mother died when she was a child, and her father married again. The love of her mother and her father's second marriage made the poor girl's life a very unhappy one.

Her stepmother was a selfish, crafty woman who treated her as if she were in the way, and I am not sure but that if she could have got rid of her without injury to herself she would have done it. Mr. Thornton himself had cause to regret the step he had taken in marrying the woman, and there was a perpetual quarrel going on between husband and wife. Rose would have gone to live somewhere else had not her father begged her to stay with him.

Doubtless Rose's making a confidant of me and my sympathy drew us together and made lovers rather than friends of us. Mr. Thornton was worth something like a hundred thousand dollars, a part of which would belong to his daughter after his death, provided the stepmother didn't beat her out of it. Rose reported certain conversations she had had with her father on the subject of the inheritance, from which I inferred that nothing deterred him from leaving all his property to Rose but the fear that his wife would break the will. He preferred to let the law divide his property since it would give his widow a third and his daughter two-thirds. This plan seemed safer than any other.

When Rose was nineteen and I twenty-two her stepmother treated her so inhumanly that she was obliged to leave the house, which she did with her father's reluctant consent. Rose thought that he would apply for a divorce were it not for the fact that he had no cause which would come within the law, and his wife took care to give him no such cause. Any such attempt on his part would undoubtedly cost him dear.

Rose and I would have been married but for the fact that I had been unlucky in the business positions I had occupied. Two different firms in whose service I was rising failed successively. I was now with the third, the agent of paper mills, and just getting a hold on the good will of my employers. So Rose went to live with an aunt till I could take care of her.

The position she occupied with reference to her stepmother was very irritating to me since it was so wearing upon my sweetest. I longed to take some sort of vengeance on the "old cat," as I called her, but could do nothing in the premises. I could prepare myself to give Rose what Mrs. Thornton deprived her of, and that was nil. However, Providence, fate or whatever we choose to call it put me in a way to aid the dear girl for beyond anything that could have been accomplished by my own efforts.

Mr. Thornton died very suddenly. I believed that his wife helped him out of the flesh and expected her to produce a will leaving her all or the bulk of his property. But when no will was found I believed I had misjudged her and concluded that her husband had adhered to his intention not to make a will. Several months passed, during which the courts were engaged in settling the estate, and Rose and I were congratulating ourselves that she would receive two-thirds of the estate or between $50,000 and $70,000.

Then all of a sudden the widow produced a will executed several years before her husband's death, leaving all the property to her except some swamp land of no value to Rose. I believed the moment I heard of this will that there was fraud in it and advised Rose to contest it. I got a lawyer to take the case, but he said that if it was a forgery the woman had done it so cleverly that there was no hope of proving her guilty. Rose, who dreaded and feared her stepmother, was opposed to taking any legal steps in the matter. Before giving it up I was determined to examine the will and went to the court for the purpose.

Persons acquire habits from their daily business life that they practice unconsciously outside of it. In the paper business on taking up a sample I always rubbed it between my thumb and finger to learn its texture, then held it up to the light to see the water lines. I had no sooner touched the one and seen the other than I recognized the paper on which the will was written—it was not on a printed form—as some that had passed through my hands in a business way. Then I remembered it as some paper manufactured by a company which my firm represented. From this I stepped to a certainty that it had been consigned to us as just manufactured when I had first handled it. The will was dated three years before, written on paper made within a year. Fraud was evident.

Accompanied by my lawyer I called on the forger of the will and proved to her that we could send her to state prison for a term of years. This broke her down. I had long been hungry for revenge upon her on Rose's behalf and now was merited. I gave her a choice of turning over the whole estate to Rose or going to the penitentiary. She chose the former course.

Rose and I celebrated our wedding under very happy circumstances. Rose wished to give up to her stepmother her widow's third, but I put my foot resolutely down on such magnanimity.

Horsepower and Kilowatt.

The British Association For the Advancement of Science adopted, as early as 1873, 746 watts as the equivalent of the British and American horsepower and 736 watts as the equivalent of the metric or continental horsepower, says Machinery. In a circular recently issued by the United States bureau of standards it is stated that in all future publications of this bureau the former value, 746 watts, or 0.746 kilowatt, will be used as the exact equivalent of the English and American horsepower. For scientific work it is quite important to have the horsepower thus standardized by being expressed in the so called "absolute" system of measurement, because the common definition of 550 foot pounds per second is scientifically correct only at a certain latitude and altitude on account of the fact that the pound weight as a unit of force varies in value as g, the acceleration of gravity, varies. The horsepower when expressed at 746 watts is equal to 550 foot pounds per second at 50 degrees latitude and at sea level.

California's Minerals.

California ranks first among the states west of Mississippi river in the value of its mineral production, according to the United States geological survey. In former years California's claim to distinction as a mineral producer rested on its output of gold, in which, in fact, it held first place in 1911, although in recent years it has usually fallen behind Colorado in the production of gold. The preminship of gold in the state has, however, been succeeded by petroleum, the value of which in California exceeds that of gold by 94 per cent and gives the state first place among the states in the production of crude oil. California leads also in the production of asphalt, of shingles and of cutlery and enjoys a monopoly in the production of borax and magnesite. It is second in the production of tungsten ores, third in the production of cement and sixth in the production of copper and stands well up among the states in the production of a number of less important minerals.

To Keep Tools Bright.

To keep tools clean and bright rub a little mercurial ointment over them, which will form a moisture resisting coating. Mercurial ointment is also known as blue butter. It is somewhat poisonous.

Another good mixture to keep tools from rusting is made by taking six parts of lard and one part of rosin. Heat these together slowly until the rosin is well melted. The mixture is then taken out into the open air for fear of fire and benzine added in about the proportion of one part of benzine to half a pint of lard-rosin mixture. When cool the mixture can be rubbed lightly over the bright steel articles. Tools thus treated will resist the corrosive action of even salt water.

Tunnel Through the Selkirk.

At an estimated cost of over $12,000,000 the Canadian Pacific railway expects within a few years to have opened a two track tunnel, four miles in length, through the Selkirk range of mountains between Calgary and Vancouver. One object of the tunnel is to eliminate the ever threatening possibility of interruption from snowslides, which, on the present line through Rogers pass, have given a large amount of trouble. The tunnel will of course be operated electrically.

PAY TRIBUTE TO EARLE

Steps Taken That Monument be Erected at Once in His Honor.

To be Built Along Side of the First Mile of State Reward Road Near Cass City.

A movement for a monument in honor of "Good Roads Earle," was started at the West Michigan Pike meeting in Traverse City the 10th. Horatio S. Earle, the father of the Michigan State Reward law, who traveled with the West Michigan Pikers this week on their inspection tour, supplying the heavy oratory, is arousing an unusual amount of enthusiasm in behalf of the "Chicago to Mackinaw Highway, Lake Shore all the Way." Because of his wonderful success in this work and because of his loyalty and ability as a good roads advocate, it has been decided that the monument which he has requested to be erected after his death, be built at once. On more than one occasion Earle has said that the only monument that he wanted was a big boulder along side of the first mile of the state reward road built in Michigan, which road is near Cass City, Tuscola county. According to his expressed desire the boulder will have lettered upon its side, "In memory of 'Good Roads Earle,' the father of the State Reward Road law for Michigan." Then there will be beside the boulder, a watering trough that thirsty horses may drink their fill, while paying their respects to the ex-highway commissioner by gazing upon the boulder.

The monument proposition was launched by Frank D. Rogers, the present highway commissioner. It was supported by Frank Hamilton and Dr. Wm. DeKleine of Grand Haven, president of the West Michigan Pike association. The monument is to be built by

TEACH DUTIES AS CITIZENS

Should be the Aim of All Schools of the Nation.

PRESENT SYSTEM CRITICIZED

But Few Are Taught to Recognize Their Obligations.

Present Day Education Tends to Clannishness and Destruction of Social Spirit Which is a Necessity.

American schools under the present system of education do not fill the place they should in fitting boys and girls for manhood and womanhood, according to Professor W. D. MacClimack, of the University of Chicago. Prof. MacClimack has long advocated radical reforms in American schools which he believes will tend to make the young graduates fitted to take up their duties as citizens. Following is given his ideas as to the changes needed:

The test of our school system is whether it prepares our young people to take vital places in a real, social world—a world of all the people, a world of real, not accidental needs and service. In many ways our schools are still unsocial. They do not give the young people what is needed to make them self-supporting when they leave and go out into the world. They do not give the things which society is glad to pay them for.

In many ways our women are the more "unsocial" of the two sexes, and our schools for girls, of course with some exceptions, especially fail to train young women to be helpful members of society, and the word society is not used in the narrow, limited sense. Girls are trained in cultivated, but "unsocial" education. They are taught to be members of a false "society" on money they do not earn and do not know how it is earned, on scale which the world really cannot afford, and with a social exclusiveness and snobbery which isolates them from the vast majority of mankind.

In order to be genuinely social, the individual must begin to make a return to society for what he or she has so long been receiving. And this return must be in some vital kind of service which society needs.

For a matter of twenty years ago the average young people of today are "receivers" only; they have taken food, clothing, shelter, the experience of others, leisure and play. But while they have been receiving all this gratis few of them have had it made plain to them that they were like a building in the course of construction which, when complete at the end of twenty years, must be put to good use. They can become social only by enthusiastically giving back to society for the rest of their lives sometimes worth while. And this law of return may be stated not as a duty, a self-sacrifice, a service, but as a pleasure of the highest kind, and a privilege. Of all things most needed, young people need to be taught that no one ever gets something for nothing. The something received, must be paid for some time.

Again, we become social by learning to work, to know and respect labor. Idleness is the greatest social sin. The individual should be expertly capable of clothing, feeding, sheltering and entertaining himself or herself, and should receive no certificate of graduation, no diploma, until he can prove the ability to do so.

He must know what his pleasure and support costs in human labor and no mature person should be allowed to think the world owes him a living or that he is free to live on the labor of others without making a return in kind.

Being social implies co-operation—the difficult art of working, not for but with others. It is much easier to work alone, to sacrifice oneself. Co-operation means respect for others, consideration, tolerance, limiting one's selfish tendencies, agreeing to work in common, patience with faults of others, refusal to have what others have not unless it has been earned by more work or as a reward. A social person is one who is capable of rapid and pleasant exchange of ideas. It means meeting and parting with persons of all classes and neither giving or receiving harm. Good breeding, justice and a sense of humor are the three essentials for this.

The social realization is often best accomplished by working with others for some higher ideal. It is difficult to be social with ones immediate competitor, but even two rivals can operate together toward some common good. All modern communities offer higher social institutions in which the individual selfishness and egotism can be lost in the work for the good of all schools, social betterment, physical improvement of cities, the institutions of religion.

No one can be finally social who insists on dividing men into fixed classes. We must all be members of the same class. Present day education tends to make us unsocial by making us exclusive. Finally, one becomes social by linking the past with the present, and development of hope in the future. Until our schools teach these things they will continue to turn out into the world every year thousands who, it is true have made high records in their studies, but who will be found unfit when they are tested as to their ability to make their own way in the world.

HELD THEIR FIRST AUCTION

Sale at Pine Point Was Well Attended by Buyers

Has Made Phenomenal Building Record Since Resort Was Opened

The first land auction at Pine Point for this season was held July 18th and 19th, conducted by George W. Fryhofer, the real estate auctioneer. Both days of the sale were well attended but rain prevented the offering of lots on the first day. Twelve lots were sold the second day. Mr. M. Barner was the fortunate winner of the free lot. The crowds were taken to and from the auction by automobiles, automobile bus and Captain Smith's boat "Potawatamie." The handsome Roger's silverware that is distributed at these auctions, pleased and interested the crowd between the sales.

Pine Point has made a phenomenal record in having cottages built. Since last season, with no one living there at that time, there are now seven attractive cottages, one costing a little over $3,000.00. Without the activities carried on there last year, the land would doubtless be just the same as it has been for many years, but even this amount of development largely enhances the value and with seven families residing at Pine Point, it is established as an attractive, growing summer colony.

There is not a prettier location in the state of Michigan. There should be more activities of this nature carried on in and around Charlevoix. With the publicity that auctions gives the land and giving free transportation and entertainment to the people, many who little thought of buying, come home as purchasers of lots. Charlevoix has no equal as THE attractive summer resort of Northern Michigan and every citizen, banker and merchant can heartily recommend to resorters the profit in securing the holdings in this vicinity. The date of the next auction at Pine Point has not been announced but will doubtless be given in our next issue.

Fruit Growers' Attention

"Cover Crops for Michigan Orchards and Vineyards" is the title of a new bulletin just issued by the Michigan Experiment Station. Concise, practical information is given concerning this important phase of orchard management. The use of winter vetch, clover, rye, oats, peas and other crops are fully considered and the adaptability of each to various conditions is discussed. Owners or managers of orchards and vineyards should not fail to write for a free copy to Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan.

IN EFFECT AUGUST 15

New Law Regulating Packing and Sale of Fruits.

Growers and Shippers Must Label All Fruits With Exact Quality.

August 15 the law enacted by the last legislature to regulate the packing and sale of fruits, berries and vegetables in Michigan will take effect. The full heading of the bill is, "An act to protect fraud and deception in the sale of Michigan grown fresh fruits and vegetables, and to provide penalties for violations of the act." The act is as follows:

Section 1. In this act, unless the contents otherwise required, the terms "closed package" shall be construed to mean a barrel, box, basket, or other container in which all the contents cannot readily be seen or inspected when such packages are prepared for market. Fresh fruits or vegetables in baskets or boxes packed in closed crates, and packages covered with burlap, tarlatan or slat covers shall come within the meaning of the term "closed package." None of the provisions of this act apply to other than Michigan grown fruits and vegetables.

Section 2. Every person who, by himself or by his agent or employee, packs or repacks fresh fruit or vegetables in closed packages intended for sale in the open market, shall cause the same to be marketed in a plain and intelligible manner as follows:

First. With his full name and address including the name of the state where such fresh fruit or vegetables are removed from the premises of the packer or dealer.

Second. The name and address of such packer or dealer shall be printed or stamped on said closed packages in letters not less than one-quarter inch in height.

Section 3. No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale in the open market, any fresh fruits or vegetables packed in a closed package and intended for sale, unless such packages are marked as is required by this act.

Section 4. No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any fresh fruits or vegetables packed in closed or open package upon which package is marked any designation which represents such fruit as "No. 1, Finest," "Best," "Extra Good," "Fancy," "Selected," "Prime," "Standard" or other superior grade or quality, unless such fruit or vegetables consists of well grown specimens, sound, of nearly uniform size, normal shape, good color, for the variety, and not less than ninety percent free from injuries or disfiguring bruises, disease, insect injuries or other defects, natural deteriorations and decay in transit or storage excepted.

Section 5. No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any fresh fruits or vegetables packed in any package in which the faced or shown surface gives a false representation of the contents of such packages, and it shall be considered a false representation when more than twenty percent of such fruit or vegetables are substantially smaller in size than or inferior in grade to, or different in variety from, the faced or shown surface of such package, natural deterioration and decay in transit, or storage excepted.

Section 6. Every person who, by himself, his agent or employee, knowingly violates any of the provisions of this act shall for each offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10 or by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not exceeding 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Antrim Alfalfa Campaign

The Antrim county alfalfa campaign began at Elk Rapids Tuesday, July 22, and continued for three days. At its northernmost limit almost reach the Charlevoix line. The speaker were: Dr. Eben Mumford, state leader of the federal extension work in Michigan; Prof. A. P. Potts, the M. A. C. alfalfa expert, and C. P. Reed, district supervisor for North Central Michigan for the federal government.

NOXIOUS WEEDS SHOULD BE CUT

Multitudes Growing on Vacant City Property in Charlevoix

Civic Pride Should Inspire Owners to Take Care of Them at Once

There is a multitude of weeds growing on vacant property in Charlevoix that should be cut at once, and kept cut during the balance of the season, in order to prevent them from maturing and scattering their seed all over the city. Weed Commissioner Webster is taking care of the noxious growth upon city property, but the ones that are growing upon the land of private individuals are thriving and maturing in abundance of seed to propagate their kind next year.

The most common of the local weeds are milk weed, burdock and rag weed, which is the bane of the hay fever sufferer. This last named plant is getting a firm hold in this region and is a serious menace to the summer resort business on account of the common belief that it produces hay fever when it is in bloom, which is indicated by the pollen which resembles sulphur, and which is wafted upon every passing breeze that passes over it during the latter part of the summer.

Civic pride should inspire those upon whose land there is a growth of weeds to cut them down in time to prevent them from maturing their seed. There is a state law which compels people to cut the weeds in their premises, and it should be applied to those who neglect to do their duty as citizens in this respect. Weeds give a city an ill kept appearance which is undesirable and the one thing that a city should pride itself upon is a clean healthy look during the months of the year when the earth is arrayed in summer garments.

The milk weed and burdock have a way of sending their seeds broadcast over the land after they have matured and if left to develop, a few plants will infect several acres with their kind.

Several instances have been reported where vacant lots are literally covered with weeds. On the Norwood road near the city limits there are two large patches of Canadian thistles which should be cut at once.

It is hoped that people who have these weeds growing upon their premises will see to it that they are cut immediately, and the ripening of their seeds thereby prevented.

STRUCK OUT EIGHTEEN MEN

Pitcher Willis of Charlevoix Had Petoskey At His Mercy

Center-field Gill Played Fine Game—Score 21 to 4

Willis the youthful pitcher of the Charlevoix ball team proved the hoodoo of the Petoskey aggregation who played ball last Sunday at the Golf grounds, cleaning them up to the tune of 21 to 4. At no stage of the game was he in danger and had the Petoskeyites at his mercy at all times, striking out 18 men during the nine innings. Center fielder Gill pulled off several stunts that brought forth applause from the fans. He made two 2-baggers, one 3-bagger and his fielding was of the gilt edge variety. The line up was as follows:

Charlevoix	Petoskey
Powers.....1b.....	Conklin
Bush.....2b.....	Norton
Willis.....3b.....	Wheeler
Nickerson.....3b.....	Ruggles
Gill.....cf.....	Fykman
Anderson.....2b.....	Jacques

Abbs.....lf.....	Krat
Willis.....c.....	Ferguson

Next Sunday the boys expect a game with Bay View and promise an exceptionally good game.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE

Mrs. Sylvester Minier Has Resided Here Since 1877

Mrs. Sylvester Minier, a pioneer settler of Hayes township, died at her home south of Bay Shore on Thursday of last week. She had been a sufferer from rheumatism contracted some fifteen years ago, and for the past three years had been unable to assist herself in any way, but during this time had been a patient sufferer and cheerful mother.

Margaret Jane Benton was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, December 22, 1812. She was married to Sylvester Minier, August 28, 1834. Eight children were born to them, three of whom are living to mourn her death: Mrs. Melvina French of Traverse City, Mrs. Viola Arnold of Charlevoix, Robert S. Minier of Bay Shore, and Mrs. Grace Welton of Chicago, a grand-daughter whom they raised from a baby.

Mr. and Mrs. Minier have resided in Hayes township since 1877, where they homesteaded in the early pioneer days. At the time of her death she was 71 years, 6 months and 21 days of age. The funeral was held from the house Saturday, at 10 o'clock, interment at Brookside cemetery.

SENATOR JONES WILL BE PRESENT

At 4th. Annual Banquet of Charlevoix County Republicans

To Be Held in Russell House at East Jordan This Year

Tuesday evening, July 23rd, has been officially announced as the date on which the fourth annual Charlevoix County Republican banquet will be held. This year it will be held at the Russell House, East Jordan, after having been staged consecutively in East Jordan, Boyne City and Charlevoix for the past three years.

As far as can be definitely announced in regard to the speakers who have promised to be present, the committees in charge announce that Senator Jones of Washington, Secretary of State Martindale, State Senator Frank D. Scott, Alex J. Groesbeck of Detroit, chairman of the state central committee, Asst. Atty General Dave Crowley, Rep. D. H. Hinkley, of Emmett county, and Judge F. W. Mayne will be on the program at the banquet.

Senator Jones will speak at length on the conditions existing in the west and especially on the Japanese question, which is of vital interest to all citizens of the United States.

The regular business meeting will be held in the Russell house for the transaction of routine business and election of officers, and the banquet will be served between 8:30 and 9 o'clock. Covers will be laid for two hundred guests at the first sitting. A free excursion to East Jordan will be run from Charlevoix, and an urgent request is made for a good representation from this city.

Exhibition of Pastels.

A glance in the window of 104 Bridge street will cause a cry of consternation when they wonder upon the clever paintings of Harry Linder of Chicago. Mr. Linder has an exhibition many pastels, landscapes, and fruit pictures which he offers for sale together with frames. He also enlarges photographs.

Harry Linder is a brother of S. P. Linder, who holds a XX degree from the Chicago Art Institute and is now abroad to finish his education. Harry Linder has painted the picture of Jane Adams, Leon Mandel, one of the Mandel Brothers of Chicago and many other prominent Chicago people.

Mr. Linder manipulates the crayons in sight of all passers-by on Bridge street and welcomes visitors to inspect his work at all times. No better an exhibit of paintings has been placed on exhibition in this city than those in Mr. Linder's collection.

PENCIL DAY AUGUST NINE

Will Be Observed Here for Benefit of N. C. W. League

UNDER ABLE DIRECTORSHIP

Mrs. Cora Lamping Has Given 20 Years of Life to Work

Mrs. Harry Nicholls Will Act as Chairman and Mrs. Stanley Bush as Secretary—Much Good Accomplished

Saturday Aug. 9th, is the day chosen for Pencil Day to be observed in Charlevoix for the benefit of the National Child Welfare League.

Mrs. Harry Nicholls will act as chairman and Mrs. Stanley Bush as secretary. The child welfare work in Michigan is under the able directorship of Mrs. Cora Lamping, who has given 20 years of service to the children of Michigan. Mrs. Lamping was for 18 years connected with the Michigan Children's Home Society, and after so many years of experience has become thoroughly convinced that more should be done to prevent families from being broken up. Everything should be done to tide over unfortunate circumstances and to reconcile the home.

Society can improve the life and give higher leads to many homes, and where this is done there will be a great reduction in the number of neglected children.

The League is co-operating with all philanthropic and educational institutions. Help is given in all cases according to the circumstances found upon careful investigation. Trained social workers are employed for this work. Private boarding houses are found for children, where it is possible to keep them with their families.

Employment is found for mothers where they may have their child with them. One of the features of the work is a traveling child welfare exhibit which will be taken to all the principle cities in the state, and which will show the investigations of the League and the methods of correction found successful.

The following subjects will be represented: Infant Mortality, Pure Milk, Child Labor, the Visiting Nurses, the Visiting Housekeeper, Proper Nursing, Proper Parental Care, Physical Neglect and its Results, Playgrounds, Family Description, Needed legislation, and other important subjects. Publicity is Education and Education is Prevention.

Gov. Woodbridge N. Ferris has issued the following proclamation: "At the request of Mrs. Cora Lamping, President of the National Child Welfare League, I am pleased to designate Sunday November 22, as Child Welfare Day throughout the State of Michigan."

"Every thoughtful citizen realizes that the nation's future finds its lodgement in the children of today. We give more or less time to the planning of the material wealth of our state and nation and it is well that we do, but how much more important it is that we study child life and plan the welfare of our children. The work of the National Child Welfare League is truly a worthy one and I am sure the citizens of Michigan will be greatly benefited by giving upon the day above designated, careful thought to the welfare of the children of the state."

Saturday, Aug. 9th is the day chosen for Pencil Day to be observed in Charlevoix for the benefit of the National Child Welfare League.

Road Work Progressing.

Commissioner O. D. Hammond reports that the county road work is progressing finely. He has the first layer of stone on the intersection of the Stover road to some distance beyond the Catholic cemetery, and trenches dug to opposite the Newman farm. This week will probably see the last course of stone on the road for a part of this distance. The new machinery has arrived and has proved satisfactory.

Moved by Ald. Priest and seconded by Ald. Cartier that the report be read and accepted and the Mayor and Clerk be authorized to issue warrants on the City Depository for $1,280.20 and the Clerk be instructed to draw orders on the various funds for the amount of each respective bill.

Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote. Ayes, Priest, See, Barney, Cartier, Powers and Shapton. Nays, none.

Moved by Ald. Barney and seconded by Ald. Shapton that the recommendation of the Police, Fire and License Committee relative to hangers for the time tower be accepted, and C. H. Kaber be awarded the contract for putting the hose hangers in the hose tower at his bid of $200. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Barney and seconded by Ald. Priest that the Mayor's appointment of A. T. Burnett as member of the Board of Special Assessors be confirmed. Motion carried.

Ald. See supported by Ald. Shapton moved the adoption of the following resolution.

Resolved, By the common council of the city of Charlevoix, that the grading and paving with crushed rock and gravel of the north boundary line of the city of Charlevoix, from north line of Center Avenue, extended north to the north boundary line of the city of Charlevoix, thirty feet in width, including the necessary curbing, gutters, cross walks, man holes, sewer pipes and approaches, to a necessary Public Improvement.

Be it further resolved, that the plat, map, plans, specifications and estimate of the committee of streets, sidewalks and swing bridges for the grading and paving of the said Michigan Avenue, from the north line of Center Avenue, extended north to the north boundary line of the city of Charlevoix, with crushed rock and gravel thirty feet in width, including the necessary curbing, gutters, cross walks, man holes, sewer pipes and approaches, be, and the same are hereby approved and adopted.

Be it further resolved, that the expense of the said public improvement shall be defrayed as follows: The expense of grading and paving all interior squares and spaces formed by the intersection of the streets and alleys, and in the center of the street in front of all public grounds, public buildings and city property, estimated at the sum of $26.00, shall be paid from the general funds of the city of Charlevoix; and a further sum of $500.00 being a portion of the estimated cost of said public improvements—aside from the grading and paving of said streets and alleys, intersections, and in the center of the streets in front of all public grounds, public buildings and city property, estimated at the sum of $53.00, and a further sum of $150.00, being a portion of the estimated cost of said public improvements—aside from the grading and paving of said streets and alleys, intersections, and in the center of the streets in front of all public grounds, public buildings and city property, estimated at the sum of $53.00, and a further sum of $150.00, being a portion of the estimated cost of said public improvements—aside from the grading and paving of said streets and Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

CHAPTER XII.

A Strange Cry From Black Lips.

OLD Governor Leslie hurried to Nureh from St. Louis the day following Colonel Strickland's own return home. He came in response to an urgent telegraphic summons from the candidate, whom he found in close conference with Major Gentry Dryden, one of Missouri's most famous criminal lawyers. Colonel Todhunter was with them.

"We'll bring you through all right, governor," said Colonel Strickland, although his worn and worried face belied the brave words. "But in the meantime I thought it best to get you down here so that I could straighten myself out in the matter of my campaign for the nomination for governor with as little delay as possible."

"What do you mean to do?" asked old Leslie.

"I mean to withdraw from the race," replied Colonel Strickland. "I can't run, carrying this weight of Tom's trouble. It's got me beat right now. I won't ask my friends to make a hopeless fight."

"You'll stay right where you are," said Governor Leslie. "You're not responsible for Tom's reckless folly, and the Democratic voters in Missouri won't hold you responsible."

"The Yancey crowd will make it appear as if the killing of Stam Tucker was a political murder," Colonel Strickland answered. "They're doing it already. Their newspapers are building the case along that line. They've published the story of the quarrel between Tom and Stam Tucker the night we opened my campaign here in Nureh and of their fight in the barroom the next day. They point out that old Bill Tucker is my bitterest political enemy and that he and his son were working tooth and nail for Stephen B. Yancey and that this political feud has resulted in the assassination of Stam Tucker's son by my son. It's a pretty black story handed that way, and it'll do me all sorts of harm throughout the state."

"They can't ignore the facts in the case," retorted Governor Leslie. "In the first place, as I understand it, your son himself doesn't know that it was he who shot Stam Tucker. He's bound to plead not guilty, and the prosecution's got to prove the fact of guilt. In the second place, the real reason for the trouble between Tom and Stam Tucker was the story told by that dog gett girl and his hearing upon their rivalry for the hand of Miss Mary Todhunter. The doggett story puts an entirely new light on the feud between the two boys."

"Not the way the Yancey organs are presenting it," said Colonel Strickland. "It only serves to intensify the original trouble and to make a thrilling 'murder story' with what they call 'romantic' as well as political trimmings. They're featuring it on that basis, and they're going to get Steve Yancey nominated just that way."

"I thought this was what you wanted to see me about," commented old Governor Leslie. "So I had a conference with the St. Louis men who worked with me to put you in the race. But before I tell you any more about it I want to ask you just one question, Bill Strickland."

A moment of silence followed these words. Colonel Strickland held Governor Leslie's eyes with his own inquiringly.

"Do you want your son to be convicted of the murder of Stamford Tucker?" asked Governor Leslie. "Good God, man!" cried Colonel Strickland. "How can you ask such a thing?"

Governor Leslie turned to Major Gentry Dryden. "Dryden," he queried, "what would be the effect of Colonel Strickland's withdrawal from the campaign at this time?"

"It would be taken as a confession of his belief in his son's guilt. It would be the worst blow possible to the defense right now. I should strongly protest against Colonel Strickland's withdrawal."

"There you are!" exclaimed old Leslie, turning to the candidate. "That was exactly the view I took of it—you've got to consider your son's interests above all else. Strickland! And now I'll tell you what your St. Louis backers said. They authorized me to refuse to accept your withdrawal as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Missouri. Aside from whatever personal regard they may have for you, they believe that, even as matters now stand, you're the strongest man in the state and that you've still got a better fighting chance to win than any other man would have. You've got to stay in, Strickland!"

"But, good Lord, man, how can I fight to any purpose?" asked Colonel Strickland piteously. "I must deal fairly with you, so I tell you right here and now that compared with

Tom's safety I don't care what becomes of my chances in the campaign. I'm going to stay right here and move heaven and earth to clear my son of

"I'll make Mizzoarah too hot to hold 'em!"

the awful charge against him, and to the time his trial's called the campaign will be over too."

"Not quite," answered Governor Leslie, unmoved. "But if that was the case it wouldn't make any difference. God knows you're justified in sticking to Tom through thick and thin, to the finish and regardless of all other demands upon you. I wouldn't wipe my feet on you if you were capable of doing anything else. So don't you worry about that. We're going to do all the fighting for you from now on, and we've picked on Colonel Todhunter here as the best man to lead what you seem disposed to call a 'forlorn hope.'"

"Now you're talkin', huh?" broke in Colonel Todhunter, his grim old face alight with the lust of battle. "I won't ask anything better'n to get out on the stump and skin 'em alive. They're crowdin' old Bill Strickland to the wall because they think they've got him beat, and Bill's friends have got to stand by him closer'n ever. Turn me loose on 'em, Leslie. I'll make Mizzoarah too hot to hold 'em!"

Old Governor Leslie smiled ominously. "We've made arrangements to that end, Todhunter," he replied. "I knew just how you'd feel about it. We want you to tell the Democrats of Missouri just exactly why we wouldn't let Strickland withdraw, just exactly why he himself won't do any more campaigning for the nomination and just exactly why and where the Yancey newspapers and the Yancey speakers are distorting the truth of this case against Tom Strickland to make it look like a political assassination. And it's going to be pretty hot work, Todhunter. You may have more than one personal difficulty on your hands before you get through with it."

"We needn't talk about that feature of it, Governor Leslie," said Colonel Todhunter. "There won't be no trouble 'less'n some o' the Yancey crowd object to a man's talkin' straight from the shoulder. We've just about got time now for a lightning' flash on the stump, takin' it for granted that I'm expected to reach all parts of the state so the sooner I start the better."

"You start tomorrow," Colonel Todhunter, responded old Governor Leslie. "We've already made the speaking appointments for you, and I've got the list of towns and dates right here with me. It's a devilish big contract, sh, and you won't get back here until just a few days before the primary elections."

"I don't want to get back here before then 'less'n I could be of some use to Tom Strickland," said Colonel Todhunter, a sudden hushiness in his throat as his eyes fell on Colonel Bill Strickland's haggard face. "The main thing I want is to give the Yancey crowd a fight they wasn't expectin', huh, and I'll be eternally condemned if we ain't a-goin' to do it too!"

Wherefore the following morning, Colonel Todhunter started out in the lead of the forlorn hope that was to make the last stand for Colonel Bill Strickland in Missouri.

It proved to be a soul wearying battle, full of battling chagrin and disappointment. On the very eve of the trial of Tom Strickland for the killing of Stamford Tucker, Colonel Todhunter returned to Nureh. He was met by Colonel Strickland, whose face seemed now not only haggard, but hopeless.

"They're pushin' us pretty hard, Bill," said Colonel Todhunter. "I've fought 'em the best I know how, but Steve Yancey's crowd is workin' Tom's case against us better'n I thought was possible among folks that know you like our Mizzoarah Democrats know you, huh. It's enough to make a dog sick to see how easy people can be turned against a man when he's in trouble. I'll just be double whipsawed if it ain't!"

"That's all right, Thurs," replied the other listlessly. "Don't you go worryin' yourself any longer about my campaign. I knew I was beat the minute they got Tom's trouble to use as a weapon against me. But what hurts me most now, Thurs, is that Governor Leslie is findin' it impossible to raise that campaign fund we counted on. I'm licked, and I've hurt you mighty bad at the same time."

But Colonel Todhunter dred up at this. "I'll be shot full o' holes if you're licked—yet!" he exclaimed. "And I ain't hurt any till you hear me holler sub. Don't you misunderstand me, Bill Strickland. I acknowledge that we've got a hard row to hoe, but that ain't no sign we ain't a-goin' to hoe it. Any way, by Godfrey, we'll make an ever lastin' good stagger at it. The next best thing to livin' victorious is dyin' game, huh?"

Colonel Strickland shook his head. "There's mighty little fight left in me," he spoke sadly.

"I'll do the fightin'," retorted Colonel Todhunter. Then he looked his friend anxiously in the face. "How's Tom's case goin'?" he asked.

"It looks mighty black," answered the other. "It's going to be a political trial, bitter as sin, because the Yancey counts on Tom's conviction to drive me out of Missouri politics. The evidence in the case is all against the boy. The courtroom will be packed with Yancey heels—there's no way to prevent it—and they'll make every demonstration possible to influence the jury. And every man connected with the court wears the gang's collar, even to Judge Pittman himself. If we ask for a change of venue we'll jump from the frying pan into the fire, because my enemies have got the whiphand anywhere we turn. Old fellow, I believe they'll have my boy's life before they get through!"

The speaker's voice broke in spite of him. Colonel Todhunter's face grew haggard and grim. "No, they won't," he spoke stubbornly. "They can't do it. They ain't got nothin' against Tom but circumstantial evidence, and it sure ought to be mighty hard here in Nureh to convict a boy like Tom, well known and comin' of a family that's lived here so long, on circumstantial evidence alone. They'll try to do it, Bill, but they can't. Tom'll get the benefit of the doubt."

There was something deeply pathetic in this eager clenching at the one remaining strand of hope. The two old friends were now making their way toward the jail to see Tom. Suddenly they came face to face with Mrs. Todhunter and Mary.

The girl advanced directly toward them with outstretched hand, her mother following.

"Howdy, Colonel Strickland!" she said, her voice trembling a little. "You are on your way to visit Tom, aren't you?"

"Yes, Miss Mary," replied Tom's father quietly. "The trial begins tomorrow, and I only left him to meet Colonel Todhunter, and he's returning with me."

"Colonel Strickland," said Mary resolutely, though her voice shook more than ever, "I want you to carry a message to Tom from me."

There was a curious little pause. Mrs. Todhunter laid her hand gently on her daughter's arm, but the girl moved away from the touch, not harshly, yet as if she felt it to be a protest.

"I want you to give Tom my love, Colonel Strickland," she said. "And I want you to tell him, from me, that I don't believe one word of these awful charges against him—not one word—either about Stam Tucker or about that—that girl!"

And as she spoke Mary Todhunter burst out crying. She dabbed piteously at her face with her handkerchief, unable to control her emotions. Then, sobbing, she turned away with her mother, no other word being spoken.

"God bless that girl of yours, Thurs!" spoke Colonel Strickland, his own voice unsteady. "She's good grit clear through—and, somehow, she gives me more courage than I've had for many a day. They haven't got Tom yet—and they'll have the fight of their lives before they do get him!"

"That's the talk!" cried Colonel Todhunter. "Face 'em that way, Bill, and we'll make 'em strain their souls for every inch they try to gain! They got to do it—by the good God up yonder in them skies. Bill, they got to do it!"

But the little flicker of encouragement caused by a girl's brave words soon died away in the somber shadow of Tom Strickland's prison. It was two very weary and gray faced old men who came away from the prisoner an hour later and parted at the jail's front, each to go to his own home.

That evening Colonel Todhunter went by appointment to the Strickland home for a conference with Tom's father and Major Gentry Dryden, leading counsel for the defense. It was nearly midnight when he returned to his own home.

The found Aunt Miranda Ransom there. The old neccess rose, trembling, at sight of him, her black hands fluttering toward him in instinctive gladness of welcome.

"Bress Gawd, yo' done come!" she cried. "I been waitin' my ole heart out waitin' for yo', huh! Kinnal Todhunter, yo' got some mighty quick an' teklish work cut out for yo' if yo' gwine save Mars' Tom Strickland's life—das hucome I hyar uow to tell yo' about it, huh?"

Through the after midnight blackness, there was seen to change into the gray of a cloud swept down a fugitive man and woman fled.

Side by side they sat in a light road wagon drawn by a ravenous horse whose long and swift stride told of its selection for this special service.

The man, gaunt, swarthy, with keen black eyes that gleamed alertly from under the wide brim of a weather beaten sombrero, seemed ill content, now ever, with the pressure being made.

Almost incessantly he urged the horse to increased effort, now and then cursing outright in the grip of a feverish impatience.

Save when he leaned forward for this urging the man sat slouching and flung the mark of the vagrant Ishmael on every line of body and limbs.

The woman was tanned, rigid, her face set always to the front. It was framed in by a shawl thrown over her head and drawn about her shoulders. Once or twice her glance went furtively to the man beside her. Fear and distrust were in her eyes. Her hands were tightly clasped together as they lay in her lap.

Deep woods stretched on either side of the road. Their stillness was profound. The enveloping gloom seemed as of the grave itself. The woman shuddered and drew her shawl closer.

"Lord ha' mercy!" she spoke. "I can't do it, Jesse—I can't! It's worse'n murder—worse'n what's been done a'ready!"

The man laid a cruel lash across his horse's flanks. "You fool!" he muttered. "It's high-time I brang you away! You lovesick fool!"

The girl's eyes flashed sullenly. "That word's a lie!" she retorted. "Ain't I goin' with you? And would I be adoin' that if I was loavesick for somebody else? It's a lie, and you know it!"

The man laughed. "If you had stayed where you was you'd h' haided the whole thing out and you'd be in jail now 'stead o' him!"

Suddenly the woman threw her arm upward. "I'll ha'nt me to my dyin' day!" she cried. "I ought to ha' told the truth! I wish I had! I wish I had! It couldn't be no worse'n it is now!"

"I say that it could!" savagely retorted the man. "You keep your mouth shut. I got all I can do to save us as it is, 'thout'n you waggin' your tongue. You keep your mouth shut!"

The woman passed her hands over her face miserably. The man again slouched down in his seat. Now and then his moody glance turned apprehensively to his companion.

Elephant Ball Game

Of the many stunts performed by the Sparks Circus herd of elephants, the one that probably gets the most appreciation, is the game of base ball played by these mighty and unwieldy pachyderms. Every play is gone through with in the most ludicrous manner, and the laughs furnished by this number will remain as a pleasant remembrance of the circus.

All the accessories, pitcher, batter, catcher, umpire, fielders and their gloves, masks, bats and uniforms are present, and "Big Mary" in the roll of batter seldom misses a home-run swing, and has thus established a 100 mark batting record for herself. Running the bases and the slide to home plate never fail to bring forth rounds of applause and laughter from the audience. Another funny situation is when the pitcher has two strikes on "Big Mary," he and the catcher get into an animated argument over the next ball to be served by the pitcher and trumpet into each other's ears. This little piece of play always meets with the instant approval of the audience and adds greatly to the already funny number. This act was presented to New York City's delighted millions last winter and came in for more favorable newspaper comments than any animal act ever seen there in recent years. This feature is positively on the program of the Sparks World Famous shows, which are billed to exhibit here next Thursday, July 31.

Bay View Letter

With one of the most successful opening weeks in years, the Bay View Assembly bids fair to surpass the great assemblies of previous years. Large crowds have attended the afternoon and evening entertainments and Bishop J. F. Berry reports the largest attendance in history at the lectures of the bible conference. With Dr. H. Lester Smith of the Central Methodist Church, Detroit, and John Balcom Shaw of the largest Presbyterian church in Chicago as leading speakers, the Bible Conference cannot be anything else but a success. An Assembly Chorus of over one hundred trained voices is meeting under the leadership of Mr. William F. Starr of the Starr Concert Co. and a large orchestra has been formed under the direction of Mr. Franz Koller of the Oberlin Conservatory. Next week's morning programs will be given over to a great missionary conference with such men as Bishop Homer C. Stuntz and Dr. Erwin H. Richards in charge. On Friday and Saturday night of this week the "Dean of Scotch rederers," Katherine Oliver McCoy, will appear respectively in Graham Moffatt's "When Buntly Pulls the Strings" and Percy MacKaye's "Tomorrow." On Wednesday of next week Strickland W. Gillian will attempt to prove his right to the title of funniest man in the world. On the next night the Lyman Howe Moving Picture Co. will begin its engagement. Already the office ticket sellers are disposing of seats for the grand concert of Mme. Schumann-Heink on August 1th.

Teacher's Examinations.

The regular August examination will be held in the high school in the city of Charlevoix on Thursday and Friday, Aug. 14-15, 1913.

The questions in reading will be based on "The Merchant of Venice," Shakespeare.

Applicants will be required to take an examination in the subject of Agriculture.

Paper will be furnished to applicants. Those wishing their papers forwarded to other counties will be required to write with pen, others may use either pen or pencil.

This is a regular examination and certificates of all grades will be issued.

Respectfully Submitted,
J. H. Milford.

How to Cool Hot Bearings.

Newly installed bearings are sometimes inclined to run hot. In a case of this kind, after scraping the box well to make the shaft fit closely in the box, use some good light oil mixed with common sulphur. Sulphur contains just enough grit to grind the shaft smooth, but will not injure the shaft. Other material having a grit should not be used, as it is liable to grind a shoulder on the shaft. Should the bearing run hot after using the sulphur and oil then use white lead and water—a very cooling mixture. Keep the shaft running and pour white lead and water into the bearing until it finally cools. Never shut down the machine while the bearing is hot, as the babbit will contract and stick the shaft.

STOCK, LEGUMES AND HUMUS.

These three go along together for any adequate success at farming. Growing grain for marketing in its raw state means impoverishment of the soil, as all experience shows. Growing live stock of course means grain to feed them, and a wise rotation means growing of clover or vetch or cowpeas, alfalfa or some other legume to secure the soil nitrogen, and with this combination of legumes and barnyard manure that greatest organic soil element, humus, is secured, which also aids in holding moisture in plant growth.—Farm Progress.

IT'S A MISCHIEVOUS MOTH.

Codling Species One of the Most Destructive in American Orchards.
The codling moth is perhaps the worst enemy with which the apple grower must contend. It lays an enormous tax upon the apple growers of this country, not only in the destruction of fruit, but in the cost of sprays, for this pernicious pest has made spraying a necessary part of orchard management. It has been estimated that the codling moth destroys fruit annually in the United States to the value of $12,000,000.

Trees must be sprayed for this pest when the petals of the flowers close and before the calyx lobes close and the apple turns down. Much depends upon doing it at the right time and in the right manner. The best way is to begin just as soon as the blossoms fall and get over the orchard as soon as possible.

Arsenite of lead or paris green is the poison used. This may be combined with bordeaux or lime sulphur for summer spray to destroy fungi. About three pounds of arsenite of lead or about one-third of a pound of paris green should give satisfactory results. It may be necessary to spray two or three times, in which case the second spraying should follow the first in about ten days.—Farm and Ranch.

DIED THURSDAY

Hubert Marcus Ackert Called Away at Tender Age

Hubert Marcus Ackert, the 11 year old son of James Ackert, whose serious illness was mentioned last week, died early Thursday morning.

At first it was thought he had been hurt by coming into contact with a door when at play and later reports were that he had been hit upon the forehead by a golf ball.

A post-mortem by Dr. R. B. Armstrong showed no traces of either of these accidents, but that his death had been caused by an ailment.

The funeral was held Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Quanten Walker officiating. Many to attend it were sent by the loyal young friends, who will miss him as their playmate and friend.

His bereaved family have the sympathy of the many friends to the loss of their young son.

FLIGHTS WERE THRILLING

Aviator Roy Francis Made All Flights on Schedule Time

Daily flights at 10:30, 3:00 and 6:00 o'clock Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week were carried out by Aviator Roy Francis in his hydro-aeroplane.

Thousands of people witnessed the flights and the universal opinion was that none could be better. Several passengers were taken up at different times, and some of them will never forget their experience while in the air.

Francis started on each flight from Pine Lake, opposite the Inn, where his machine now lies.

Height of the Anvil.

Some blacksmiths do not consider the height of their anvil in relation to their own height. Where the blacksmith is working on an anvil that is too high he is unable to strike a good hard blow, while, on the other hand, a tall man working at a low anvil ends up by making himself round shouldered. A good rule to go by is to have the anvil just at such a height that the smith may readily touch the anvil face with his knuckles when clamping the hammer handle and standing in an upright position. — Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Mr. Brown is the son of P. D. Brown and left here about seven years ago.

Miss Thyma McGill left Wednesday for a week's visit on Beaver Island.

Miss Ninette Larson, who has been visiting Mrs. Julia Reynolds, returned to her home in St. James, Wednesday.

George W. Bailey of Boyne City, chairman of the board of supervisors and well and favorably known in this city, is very ill at his home to that city from an attack of acute indigestion.

A democratic office holder in this court established a bad precedent the other day by committing an error. But the fact that he was also the editor of four newspapers may excuse his rash act.

Probate Judge S. A. Correll left Tuesday morning for Grand Rapids, where he will attend the three-day session of the Probate Judges' Association. The session opens Tuesday, with an address by Gov. Ferris.

Rep. C. A. Wendteller, of Van Buren county, will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor next year. His candidacy was discussed at a conference at Lansing last week. He is a progressive Republican.

Marriage licenses were issued this week to Robert Kewagoshkum, age twenty-four of Bay Shore and Miss Charlotte Pete, age twenty-five of Brutus. Charles Nicholls, age twenty-two and Rachel Arnold, age seventeen, both of Boyne Falls.

Our friend Tinklepangh of the Kalkaska Leader rises to make the following remark, with which we heartily agree: It's only about the length of a sixty day note until the frost will be on the pumpkin again, and we'll be wondering where the "good old summer time" has gone.

Invitations listed are being made out for a very enjoyable dancing party at the Hotel Wolverine next Friday evening. A number of guests from East Jordan, Charlevoix, Petoskey and Wolverine will be present and Clarke's orchestra will furnish the music.—Boyne City Journal.

Lisle Shanahan left Friday evening for Adrain for a short visit with Mrs. Shanahan. From there he took his two children to Edwardsburg, where they will stay for some time at the home of his parents. Mr. Shanahan says the condition of his wife shows a great improvement since leaving here.

Fire destroyed the Bolted Basket Company's plant at Boyne City Tuesday about noon. The plant was valued at $17,000, and the loss is estimated at $15,000. Twenty men are thrown out of employment. The stock was owned by the Collier family and it is not known at present whether they will rebuild or not.

Bending Cast Iron. Few mechanics know that cast iron can be bent or straightened, as the case may be, says Popular Mechanics. For example, take a piece of flat cast iron, place it on a level, solid surface and strike it lightly with a ball peen hammer. Do not strike hard enough to break or crack the casting.

How to Clean Jewelry. To cleanse articles of silver, gold, bronze and brass use a saturated solution of cyanide of potassium. To cleanse small articles, dip each one into the solution and rinse immediately in hot water; then dry and polish with a linen cloth. Larger articles are cleaned by rubbing the surface with a small bit of cotton saturated in the solution. As cyanide of potassium is a deadly poison, care must be taken not to have it touch any sore spot on the flesh.

Orn Adams of Charlevoix and Miss Maud Kettledge of Petoskey, were united in marriage Tuesday morning by Justice of the Peace, H. C. Cooper.

Mrs. Ward Bennett and son, Kent, nor, have spent the past week at Glen Haven, visiting at the home of Mr. Bennett's mother. They returned Wednesday.

About fifty people from East Jordan, Boyne City and Charlevoix took in the excursion on the Beaver, Tuesday, to visit the Y. M. C. A. camp on Beaver Island.

Sam C. Smith, cashier of the First National bank of Boyne City, with his wife, was in the city Monday on their way to Beaver Island, to attend the Y. M. C. A. camp.

"I've done a whole lot for your sake, Lottie May," he spoke at last. "I could have got away long ago. I'm taking my chances on your account. And you don't seem to care."

Lottie May, however, was not so easily satisfied. "Yes, I do, Jesse," she exclaimed. "I know just what you're doing for me. The only thing I got to do is to go with you. And you mustn't think I don't appreciate it." Her hands fluttered feebly at her throat. "My God!" she cried, her voice breaking in anguish. "Tom Strickland's going to be hung! He's going to be hung! They ain't nothing on earth can save him!"

Far in the east the gray dawn was breaking.

"It's Tom Strickland!" cried the man. "I'll be glad when he is hung. You've always been in love with him!"

"He's going to be hung!" repeated the girl. "And they ain't no way to save him now!"

An evil mockery happened into the man's face. "Oh, yes, there's a way," he retorted. "You go back there to that trial and confess the truth. You're the only one on God's earth that can save him. Ain't that so?"

The girl's face whitened. As the man spoke they had turned from the pile road and were going deeper into the woods. A faint light of day had come. The faces of the two were haggard and worn.

"Yes, I'm the only one!" cried Lottie May. "I'll do it. And that's what I'd do now if I had the chance to tell the whole truth. I ain't thinking no more about you. I'm thinking about Tom Strickland!"

A foreboding and disquieting calm was revealed in a barren little opening ahead. The man laughed aloud as he saw it.

"You'll have to take it out in this, Lottie May," he exclaimed triumphantly. "I've got you now where you are safe. When you and me leave that shack tonight there'll be no more talk of you saving Tom Strickland. We'll be headed straight for Oklahoma then and nothing can stop us!"

The girl's eyes rested on the miserable little cabin. An ominous light was in them. The man drew up at the hut and assisted his companion from the wagon. He pushed open a creaking door. The cabin's interior showed black and forbidding.

"That's where we stay till night time," he said. "I'll take the horse and wagon round where they won't see us. If anybody happens to come along, and I don't want to more of your foolishness, Lottie May!"

The girl started as if struck. "Don't talk to me like that!" she cried. "I ain't your nigger yet. I ain't got to do anything I don't feel like doing. You're takin' too much for granted, Jesse!"

The man seemed to lose all patience at this. Grasping the girl by the shoulders he forced her into the hut. Then he disappeared. A moment later he returned.

The girl was standing against the wall. Her face was white as her arms. She shook her body. The man closed the door behind him.

ANTHRACITE A LUXURY.

Use of Hard Coal Is Largely Restricted to Domestic Trade.

Anthracite coal was at one time an important factor in the fuel supply of this country, but its use in that line of industry has now almost entirely ceased, according to J. W. Parker of the United States Geological Survey, as it has been supplanted by coke made from bituminous coal.

The principal demand for anthracite will be in the future, as it has been in the more recent past, restricted largely to domestic trade, for which such sizes as furnace, egg, stove and chestnut are required. The breaking down of the lump coal, which was formerly a marketable product, for the preparation of the domestic sizes results in a much larger proportion of the small or undersize sizes, all of which are sold at less than the cost of production. All the profits on the mining operations must be obtained from the prepared domestic sizes, for the revenue obtained from the smaller sizes, which are sold largely in competition with bituminous coal for steaming purposes, serves only to reduce the cost of the domestic sizes.

The conditions under which the anthracite mines are operated, the great depths to which the workings are carried, the consequent increased expense of mining and the increased cost of labor all contribute to make anthracite fuel more and more a luxury.

During recent years the anthracite operators have adopted the policy of making an allowance of 75 cents per ton from circular prices for domestic coal purchased in April of each year, with an advance of 10 cents per ton for each succeeding month until the scheduled prices are restored in September. This has had a more salutary effect in stabilizing the anthracite trade than any other action taken by those controlling the anthracite industry. Its purpose is to encourage the purchase of anthracite in the spring and early summer, making the volume of the coal business the storage plants for the following winter and at the same time to cause the mines to be operated more regularly, thus giving steadier employment to employees throughout the year.

SHOTGUN INDICATOR.

Automatic Arrangement to Give Alarm at Irrigation Ditch.

A progressive farmer of the Hollister valley, in California, wishing to cut down operating expenses as low as possible, installed an ingenious automatic shotgun alarm in connection with his irrigation supply ditch.

The shotgun is mounted vertically on a supporting frame and its trigger is attached by a cord to a float in the ditch below. If for any reason the water supply drops below its normal level the lowering of the float causes a pull on the trigger, and the consequent discharge of the gun notifies the farmer, even though he be engaged at some distant corner of his farm. He thus saves the wages of an extra man to watch the irrigation supply.

FOR FIRE FIGHTING.

Portable Hydrant Heads That Cleanse Over Stagnant.

Hydrant heads, portable in the hydrant system, are designed for use in the fire department. They are used in the hydrant system to clean out the hydrant and to prevent the hydrant from becoming clogged with dirt and debris. The heads are made of brass and are mounted on a handle that can be operated by a single person. They are used to clean out the hydrant and to prevent the hydrant from becoming clogged with dirt and debris.

PORTABLE FIRE HYDRANT HEAD.

that the connecting of the portable head with the fire hydrant can be accomplished in much less time than it takes to extract the usual hose coupling from an ordinary fire hydrant.

The portable head, complete, weighs no more than 110 pounds and has five openings, of which four will receive two and one-half inch hose couplings, while the fifth, which rises from the top of the head, is fitted for a three inch hose coupling or for direct connection of a monitor nozzle to be used when the fire is sufficiently near to be played upon from the position of the hydrant.

The valve levers, by means of which the pressure of water passing through each connection is regulated, are clearly shown in the illustration.

Rheumatism and the Heart.

Don't overlook the grave fact that rheumatism easily settles in the heart, and disturbs the valvular action. The cure consists in removing the cause. Foley Kidney Pills so tone up and strengthen the kidneys that they keep the blood free of poisons and uric acid crystals, that cause inflammation, swollen joints, backache, urinary irregularities and disturbed heart action. Try them. Ivy Drug Store, Adv.

Substitutes For Pneumatic Tires.

It is safe to say that no subject has received more careful thought and attention from inventors within the last year than the tire problem. But no one of the scores of recently patented devices is quite equal to the plain air-tire wheel fitted with pneumatic tires. Most of the devices employ springs to take up the gap between the tire and the axle and use solid rubber or similar material for the actual tread of the tire. Ingenious as many of these schemes are, they are bound to be less serviceable than the pneumatic tire, due to the number of moving parts, which are subject to wear and breakage. Furthermore, there is a great tendency to rattle and jar whenever a small obstruction is met by the tire. So, although the problem of substitute for pneumatic tires has not been entirely solved, much work is being done and it is apparently only a matter of time until we may expect something even better than the present pneumatic tire. New Leadless Storage Battery.

A Swedish inventor has put on the English market a new type of alkaline storage cell. The plates consist of active materials which are loaded with active material, oxyhydrate of nickel mixed with graphite in the positives and finely divided alloy of iron and cadmium and certain other substances in the negatives. MUCH MONEY IS WASTED

In Repairing Roads Which Should Have Been Built Right at Start.

West Michigan Pike Project the Starting Point in the Development of Good Roads in Northern Michigan.

The Western Michigan Pike Project is only the starting point in the good roads work. It is only the entering wedge for the great work that is to follow. A few counties and townships may oppose the project for a time, just as the towns opposed the interurban roads a few years ago. But in the not distant future these people will be boasting with as great energy as those who are boasting today.

It is only those who fail to realize the wonderful possibilities for development in Michigan who are hanging back. The entire northern part of the state is a territory of marvelous, though largely undeveloped resources. That is why the enthusiasm for good roads was the most marked from Grand Haven to Pellston. The residents of the northern section of the state know what golden promise the future offers those who are willing to venture their money and effort.

There is no doubt whatever that within a quarter century Northern Michigan will be the greatest producing section in all America of fruits native to the temperate zone. Certain parts of the north country are great in dairying possibilities. Land nowhere produces better potatoes or more of them to the acre. Wheat, oats and rye yield liberally, and there is less danger in the northland from insect, bacterial and sporadic injuries to crops and fruits than in any other section of the country.

Within a few years Northern Michigan is to be a wonderful agricultural and horticultural section. Land near the lake shore on both sides of the state is going to bring fabulous prices in comparison to their present market values.

Development is in its infancy, but it has a substantial start. Within the past few years thousands of families have been attracted to the new lands of Michigan and are making homes for themselves and fast paying for their farms. Instances are not rare where settlers have paid for their farms from what they have produced in from two to five years, besides making improvements and taking their living from the soil. And if they have done this with the present haphazard system of marketing, no system of grading and packing their product at all, and at large expense of moving their fruits and crops to the vessel ports or to the railroads, what can they not do when these obstacles are overcome?

What is needed most is roads—good roads. The crops must be marketed and the cost should be the minimum. What is being wasted now in high road taxes each year for constant repairs to bad roads should be invested in substantial pikes that will draw their share of the state rewards and put an end to the ceaseless repair funds.

Every township in Northern Michigan has wasted enough in 10 years on repairs to bad roads to build miles of the best graded highway under the state specifications. Pouring the wealth garnered from the land into these repair funds is like pouring water into a rat hole. Every year these funds need replenishing. "Pay! Pay!" is the cry of the highway commissioners at every spring election, where the old township system is still in use.

But the movement for good roads is well founded. It is backed with the facts, figures and logic of the experts who for years have made a study of the highway problem. Now, for the first time in the history of Michigan, it looks as though the pioneers in the movement are about to realize for the state on their investment of time and effort. It looks as though the people at last have their eyes open to the immediate necessity for good roads and lots of them.

DOING GOOD WORK

Road Commissioner Hipp Making Fine Showing in Road Work.

The work on the county road building east from East Jordan is making good progress, two miles having the great bulk of the grading expense has been completed. The "Healy Hill" on this stretch which for a quarter of a century has been the bogy of teamsters with heavy loads, is hushed and the grade now in no place exceeds the six per cent limit. The expense on the grading of this hill is $24,750. Commissioner Hipp reports the total expense in grading the two miles, including the bill above referred to is $1,023.10, which includes $58.20 paid for tile for drains. Of this sum $1,539.51 has been paid out to labor and gauged by the work accomplished, Commissioner Hipp is making an exceptionally good showing for the money expended.—Enterprise.

Appointment Confirmed.

William J. Lewis has received notice that his appointment as postmaster for Boyne City, sent to the senate by President Wilson some days ago, has been confirmed, which definitely settles the matter of who is to serve the people in the capacity of "head mail man" for the coming four years. It is expected that the commission and other necessary arrangements will be completed in time for the change to be made in the office about August.—Boyne City Times.

GIVE NAME TO THE FARM HOME

Has Been Found to be Advantageous in a Great Many Ways.

Work up a Reputation for Quality in Products You Place on Market.

The advantage of having the farm home named and using the same on business stationery has often been discussed. Desirable as that has been heretofore, a law passed by the legislature adjourned, makes it still more desirable, since it is designed to prevent a confusion of the country. This law provides that owners of farms may have registered with the county clerk any name they may select for their farm or ranch. And gives them the exclusive right to use such name in any county. This will prevent confusing names to a very desirable degree and will also enhance the value of the name of the farm as a business trademark. It has been demonstrated in many instances that where products are grown upon the farm which may be so packed as to reach the consumer in original packages, it pays to have the name of the farm where the commodity was grown on the package particularly if the quality is kept at a high standard at all times, since customers using a satisfactory article so marked will be sure to want more of the same thing. It would be the part of wisdom for Michigan farmers to take advantage of this law when it goes into effect and register their farm trademark with the county clerk, and in the meantime it would be well to consider suitable names for the purpose.

To Resume Operations.

The Bolted Basket Company at Boyne City will resume operations as soon as suitable quarters can be found. Mr. Collier is now looking over the plant of the Badger Woodware Company and other locations in the city, with a view of locating so as to be able to start at the earliest possible moment.

At Hooker's Garage.

Seth Smith, formerly with the Northern Garage of Petoskey, and manager of the Harbor Springs Garage, is now located at Hooker's Garage on Antrim street. Mr. Smith is prepared to do all kinds of repair work. Best facilities for washing and polishing cars in the city.

Have you tried them?—The Courier want adds.

W. R. C. HOLD BIG CELEBRATION

Baxter Corps Finely Entertained by Petoskey Ladies.

Observed 25th Anniversary—Plates Laid for Over 100 Guests.

On Tuesday, July 23, Charlevoix W. R. C. were entertained by Lombard Relief Corp of Petoskey, in honor of their 25th anniversary.

Charlevoix ladies to the number of 24 met at the depot and went to Petoskey on the 10:55 train, where they were met by Mrs. Dunton, corp inspector of Petoskey, and escorted to the hall. Here they were introduced to all the ladies, and spent the remainder of the morning, visiting and getting acquainted. The Misses Lowery of Illinois were present, as well as many other out of town corps ladies.

At one o'clock the dining room doors were thrown open and a two course dinner was served to 100 ladies. The dinner cannot be spoken of too highly, the Petoskey ladies proving themselves to be excellent cooks.

At 2:30 the meeting was called to order. After the business of the order was completed, a very interesting program was given. Several readings and vocal selections were given, and a very interesting history of Lombard Corps, covering the 25 years since it has been organized. Seven charter members were present, and Mrs. Dennis of Baxter Relief Corps completed the program by giving several instrumental selections.

Miss Lowry, state department secretary of Illinois, gave a very instructive talk on corp work, after which Mrs. C. R. Bellinger, president of Baxter corps of Charlevoix, was called upon for a few remarks.

At 5:30 the hall was closed and all parted, feeling that they had spent a very pleasant day, and also one long to be remembered.

ODDS VINDICATED

Receives Six Cents Damage in Libel Suit Against Editor Gould

After being out twenty-four hours, the jury in the libel case brought by Congressman Francis Dadds of Mount Pleasant against Editor Gould of the Mount Pleasant Enterprise, brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and awarded nominal damages of six cents. This leaves each to pay his own costs. The verdict is considered by Mr. Dadds to be a vindication of the charges made by Gould that he voted against the popular election of senators and in favor of the sugar trusts.

There is still pending a suit begun by Mr. Dadds against Congressman Lindquist of Greenville for $50,000 based on the same statements, made during the campaign last year.

PLEASE MAKE SETTLEMENT

Accounts Due Courier Should be Paid So Estate Can be Closed.

This week we are making a special request of our subscribers who are in arrears with their subscription to pay up by August 1, or during the week following. Owing to the death of Glenn M. DuBois, senior member of the firm of DuBois & Usher, it is necessary to make a complete settlement of his estate, which is now in the probate court. This includes the settlement of all subscription accounts as well as other bills now on our books. We also have other obligations to meet during the first ten days of August and must make this request imperative.

Just make an effort to straighten up your account with us. It is as easy to settle now as at a later date, and by so doing, you will greatly lessen the work in making a settlement of the estate.

SHOULD BE DONE AT ONCE

Public Rest Rooms Should Be Built Immediately

Expense Would Be Small, While Benefit to Health and Comfort Immeasurable.

At this time the Courier desires to call attention to a great necessity that exists in the business portion of the city, and that is lavatories for women.

Charlevoix really has no place of that kind, and even the stores of the city have paid but little attention to this matter. When one stops to consider the great distances many women have to come, perhaps from a distance of several miles, to do their shopping, and realizes that but little attention is paid to their comfort, it is easy to see that the city should arrange for a number of these rooms and see that they are properly kept. Women from the rural districts with their little family of children, many who have come for miles to this city to do their trading, have absolutely no place to go, unless to some private dwelling.

This is a matter that is of interest to every woman, not only in the city, but as well as in the country, and also the tourists. The expense of establishing them would be comparatively small, while the benefit to health and comfort would be immeasurable in dollars and cents.

Let us get busy and take proper care of women, children and tourists who throng our streets every day.

FIREARM PURCHASERS

Must Register on Dealer's Book for Identification in the Future.

After August 15, men who buy guns in Michigan will be forced to leave a clue behind them with the hardware man. A new law, enacted by the solons as part of the 1913 batch of legislation directs that henceforth every person purchasing firearms must register with the dealer.

The man buying rifles, pistols, shotguns or other tools of destruction will be required to write his name, age, occupation and residence in the dealer's book. Of course this also applies to women. Other means of identification also will be demanded. These will be the number of the gun, purchased or other marks which may distinguish the weapon from other weapons.

DIED AT MANILA

Mrs. R. S. Swinton, Was Formerly Miss Arvilla Dunham of This City

Dr. A. A. Swinton received a cablegram from Manila, Philippine Islands, Monday, announcing the death of Mrs. R. S. Swinton, wife of R. S. Swinton, his brother, formerly of this city, but who for the past three years has been on the island. Mrs. Swinton was formerly Miss Arvilla Dunham, a sister of Mrs. Lisle Shanahan, and a graduate of the C. H. S. class of 1910.

Details of the death were not given, but it was stated that Mr. Swinton left the island aboard an army transport the 25th, accompanied by his little child and a native nurse, and would come direct to Charlevoix. About thirty days will be consumed on the return trip, they reaching here about the first of September.

HURT IN RUNAWAY

Mrs. Joe Kemp and Daughter Badly Bruised in Accident

Saturday afternoon while Mrs. Joe Kemp, and daughter, Jennie, who live on the East Jordan road three miles south of Ironton, were driving into Charlevoix, their horse ran away, quite severely injured both of them.

As they were coming down the hill at the south end of Bridge street, near the Benin residence, the breaching broke, letting the buggy down onto the horses' heels. The horse became frightened and plunged madly down Bridge street. In front of Bakers' Inn the buggy struck a bus, which was standing there, tipping it over and threw out the occupants. They were picked up and carried into Conita's restaurant, where it was found that Mrs. Kemp had received a badly bruised hand, arm, her head cut and back badly wrenched. Miss Jennie also sustained severe bruises about her head and shoulders and one hand and badly hurt.

After receiving medical treatment they went to their home in the evening on the Str. Hum. The buggy was badly deminished.

Charlevoix 8, Petoskey 6.

The Charlevoix ball team continued its winning streak by defeating Petoskey last Sunday by a score of 8 to 6. Willis, Charlevoix's star pitcher, struck out eleven men and walked one. Gurtichen of Petoskey struck out four and walked four. In the eighth inning Spade, in a double play to Anderson, saved the game for Charlevoix.

CALLS PROBATE LAW UNJUST

Unequalities of Present Laws Should Be Corrected.

Many Important Subjects Discussed at Probate Judges Meeting.

"If the wife dies in Michigan today without a will, and she is survived by her husband and children, her real estate will go to the children and the husband will receive nothing. But if the husband dies without a will, and he is survived by his widow and children, the widow will receive one-third of the real estate as her inheritance," was one of the most important subjects discussed at meeting of the Association of Probate Judges, held in Grand Rapids last week, and which was attended by Judge of Probate S. A. Correll of this city.

It was declared that the association should urge upon the state legislature the necessity of correcting this unjust and inequitable situation.

President Stone stated in his address to the association "that the husband should be given some right in his wife's real estate after her death, just as the widow is given an interest in her husband's real estate after his death."

Gov. Ferris made a plea for higher ideals and better methods in dealing with juvenile delinquents, eighty-four counties in the state were represented, and much knowledge was gained by those who attended.

DELICIOUS APPLES

New System of Packing Apples Proves a Great Success

Last week a representative of the Courier was given a sample of delicious Stark apples grown in the Newhall orchards on the North Manitou Islands last year, which are now being taken from cold storage in Chicago, in perfect condition. Out of seventy packages removed from storage since the middle of July, there was not a rotten apple, and but two apples with an indication of decay. This is a record which it is believed, is impossible for the Pacific coast fruit growers to equal.

The apples were given to Capt. Wm. Finucan, of the Manitou by Mr. Newhall, and proved that they were certainly "fruit with flavor."

CAMP FIRES WERE ATTRACTIVE

Charlevoix County's Y. M. C. A. Boys Camp is History.

FORMED HABIT OF EATING

Able to Dispose of "Vans" Cooking Three Times a Day.

Synopsis of Every Day Life in Camp—Special Outings Given Them While on Island.

Charlevoix county's first Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camp is history, and creditable history too.

The boys of the county left the mainland on July 15th for the camp at Beaver Island, where the camp director and the chief, E. R. Van Leuven, had things in readiness for their reception. Arriving at camp the boys opened their boxes to extract the necessary dishes and other eating utensils and made their way to the dining tent, where they did full justice to "Van's" first offering. Really, they formed the habit at this first meal and showed their approval three times a day.

The first afternoon was spent in pitching tents, but the boys worked so faithfully at this that all were settled in their quarters in time to avail themselves of the afternoon's swimming privileges. The bathing beach was ideal. No holes or sudden depths made the bathing dangerous and it was possible to wade out 100 or 500 feet from the shore before reaching water of another depth.

The first camp fire was lighted at about eight o'clock in the evening, and on each succeeding evening the camp fire hour grew more attractive to the campers. Stories, readings, songs and helpful talks plus popcorn balls and fudge, made the hour pass all too swiftly.

On Wednesday morning camp life began in earnest. The rising call was given at 6:30 and all scrambled for their morning dip in the lake. After this refreshing experience, the boys lined up for morning exercises and following this, all headed for the dining tent, taking time to pick up fire wood along the way that the chef might not be hampered in his arrangements for the succeeding meal. Necessary announcements were always made during meal time and boys appointed to care for necessary camp duties, such as washing dishes, peeling potatoes, bringing water and preparing the material for camp fire.

After breakfast all bedding was put on the line for an airing, the tents slicked up for the day and then the morning sports began. Sports lasted until eleven when activities were transferred to the water front. Bathing until 11:30 gave the boys plenty of time in the water and still gave them time to dress for dinner.

The test to come at 12:30 and though the boys often insisted that they were not tired, they were obliged to rest, for it merited a happier and healthier life. Afternoon sports started at 1:30, lasted until 4:30, when the boys had a second opportunity to swim. The afternoon swimming period was succeeded by preparations for afternoon tent inspection, beds were made and everything made ship shape for the night. After supper occurred the leaders meeting, at the conclusion of which the leaders conducted the bible study for their respective groups. The day's activities closed as has been mentioned with a bonfire that would cause the famous Chicago fire to rave with jealousy.

Two special outings were enjoyed by the boys due to the kindness of Captain Honner and Mr. John Stevens. The former took the boys to Garden Island in his sail boat to visit the Indian cemetery, and the latter made it possible for all to take a trip to the head of Beaver Island on the narrow gauge logging road. A special car was provided for the party and every other convenience that the road affords.

A lively quail tournament was one thing that worked interest in (Continued on page 4)

CERTAIN RESULTS

Many a Charlevoix Citizen Knows How Sure They Are.

Nothing uncertain about the work of Doan's Kidney Pills in Charlevoix. There is plenty of positive proof of this in the testimony of citizens. Such evidence should convince the most skeptical doubter. Read the following statement:

L. B. Lancaster, 203 May street, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have proven a valuable remedy to me. I suffered for seven years from my kidneys. My back ached at night and when I arose in the morning I was stiff and lame. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and my rest was disturbed. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got them from the Ivy Drug Store. They have done me a world of good. I can rest better at night, my back is stronger and my aches and pains are gone. I am pleased to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me."

SLACKED LIME KILLS THE LICE

Farm Journal Tells of Personal Experiences With Parasites.

Declares That a Single Louse Will Kill a Young Turkey in a Short Time.

In the current issue of Farm and Fireside a contributor tells about the ravages of lice among chickens and reports his best solution of the problem. Following is an extract: "Thousands of newly hatched chicks that die without cause owe their early demise to lice. Both the regular hen-house and the red mite are an abiding menace to growth, health and egg production."

"A successful turkey-raiser of my acquaintance declares that a single louse will kill a young turkey. He avoids enlisting the services of hens to hatch out young turkeys because they are so likely to be bearers of lice. He left to himself and given plenty of range the turkey hen rid herself of these pests and establishes a nest at some point quite remote from the home roosting-place and the proximity of lice."

"Many people who anticipate great results from fowls allow them to be literally devoured by lice. Frequently a bird falls off the perch dead during the night and sits die on the nest from lice."

"Even if the fowls do live for a time in spite of the lice they will later succumb to cholera, dysentery and other diseases to which a lowered vitality has rendered them susceptible."

"I tried many experiments in an endeavor to abate the lice nuisance, such as using kerosene and with carbolic acid, melted alum, kerosene and gasoline applied to the perches, but all proved unsatisfactory, for as soon as such applications dried or evaporated the pests came out of their hiding places and traveled the walls intrepid as ever to renew their attack on their sleeping victims."

"My next method, which proved successful, was to fill an open bushel basket or box with quicklime and keep it in a dry place until it air-slaked. As soon as it had fallen into the consistency of flour it was ready for use. Now I applied a liberal quantity where the ends of roosts were attached to building and scattered a good dusting of it on the ground under the roosts. I cleaned out the old materials in nest-boxes, put in new straw and sifted an ounce or two of the lime into the straw."

"Lice cannot endure crawling in this sharp lime-dust, and being prevented from getting on the roosts they starve out. When a hen goes on the nest she rubs around, and the lime-dust getting in her feathers soon drives all lice off."

"Since using air-slaked lime twice a year, spring and fall, I have seen no more mites on the walls or on the eggs or setters."

BRAIN WORK COUNTS.

The farmers must get their heads into their work. I do not advise you to work longer hours in the day or to work any harder while you are at it. My text for the men on the farm is to get in more head work. Some men seem to shive away many hours a day and yet accomplish very little. I question if these men read the Bible. The Bible says, "A man shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow." Most men leave their heads out of the game and make a poor living by the sweat of their backs and the sweat of the backs of all the rest of the family.

Professor A. E. Chamberlain, St. Paul, Minn.

WHAT ONE MAN HAS DONE

With "Wornout" Land Another Might Try Also With Success.

A farm of 100 acres, twenty-five miles out of Philadelphia and with great railroad facilities, was sold for some years ago because the land was worn out. It had a thin, gravelly soil. Most of the land lies on the side of a ridge and has a moderate slope, but about five acres are level meadow, on which a fine spring is situated.

A market gardener purchased the farm at a tax sale. He cut trenches about 500 feet long and 20 feet wide across the meadow, the bottoms of which were covered with gravel, and diverted the spring water into them. A stand of water-reeds was then started, and by fall it covered the trenches, and the owner began to cut and ship it to the Philadelphia markets. As cold weather approaches the reeds are protected from frost by rough houses built over the trenches. The north sides of the houses are of thick boards, against which the reeds are stacked to keep out the wind. The south sides are of glass. The heat of the sun and the warmth of the spring water are sufficient to keep the reeds growing rapidly all winter without resort to artificial heat. A portion of the bed is cut over each day, and in about ten days it is again ready for cutting. The returns the first winter were about $100 a day from the reeds. A narrow strip of soil between the back of the house and the edge of the trench is devoted to violets and has proved very profitable.

On the remainder of the farm, French lilacs are set about four feet apart and kept well cultivated for four years. The bushes are then taken up and forced to bloom about the Christmas holidays. A handsome profit is realized each year, and steady employment is given to a large number of men. The former owner couldn't make it pay.—Country Gentleman.

THE BUSY LITTLE BEE.

Bees like music and are easily tamed to gather at the call of certain strains, but they do not like harsh or loud voices or discordant sounds. An even temper is an absolute necessity in a beekeeper. Swarms have been known to "growl" because a loud talking man stood near the hives.

It is a mistake not to wire the sheets in the broad frames, for when it comes to extracting the frames, to say nothing of holding the completed frame or an angle. It is a great comfort to find that the colonies are not continually breaking loose from the frames, which would otherwise be the case.

To transfer bees before swarming time remove the top of old hive and set a single story hive over it. Make all the joints bee tight. Now have foundation in new hive, and the bees will soon work up into it. After the queen gets to laying well you can lift off the new hive and do what you please with the old hive and combs. This is a quick way to get bees into a modern hive without much trouble.

FARMING WITH BRAINS.

Never venture upon an old bridge with team or machinery without seeing that it is firm and safe for heavy weights.

If the fertility of the soil is to be maintained it must be supplied with vegetable matter. Turn under cover crops and increase the humus supply.

According to the Iowa Press bulletin No. 12, sodium arsenite is the only chemical that will entirely destroy the Canada thistle. It is applied at the rate of one and a half pounds to fifty-two gallons of water.

Do not expect the hired man to feel satisfied if you leave him alone with all the chores while you are away visiting unless you are willing to do the same for him occasionally. Hired men are human beings and will, as a rule, appreciate fair treatment.

A soil that dries out quickly, is loose and sandy and lacks is also in poor physical condition from too little water and organic matter. Where irrigation is practicable this is advisable, plenty of manure, green manure, liming if there is sourness and thorough and persistent cultivation.

Farm and Garden

DO YOU LIKE "SWEETS?"

They're Fine With Gravy—Here's How You May Grow a Crop.

Plant a few sweet potatoes in your garden this spring. They aren't hard to grow, and what is richer to eat than brown sweet potatoes with gravy? Besides, this vine is very ornamental, and its thick, dark foliage helps to make your vegetable garden more attractive.

Sweet potatoes are grown by means of sets or sprouts which grow from the root tubers. It is best to get them from seed growers or gardeners. They require warm, moderately rich, sandy loam. If the land is too fertile there will be a large growth of top at the expense of the root. The plants may be set out from the middle of May until the 1st of July or after the late frosts are over.

The potatoes may be grown on the level, but a ridge usually is preferred in the garden ridging may be done with a hoe, making the ridge about eighteen inches broad and six inches high. The rows should be from three and a half to four feet apart. Set the plants along the center of the ridge—they should be about two feet apart—and if the soil is moist it is only necessary to dip the roots in water before setting. But if it is unusually dry at this time it will be advantageous to sprinkle the plants occasionally.

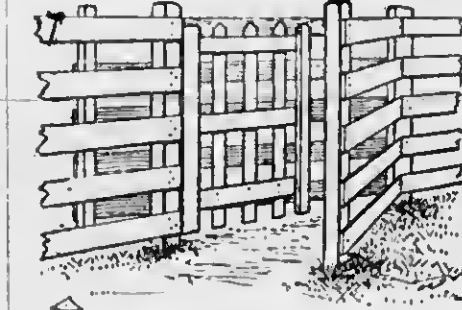

When the plants are small, they should be cultivated often enough to kill the weeds and keep a mellow surface. Later on the vines themselves will cover the ground; then cultivation is impracticable as well as undesirable. After the vines are too large to cultivate they should be lifted occasionally or they are likely to take root at the joints and keep on forming more vines with no roots in the hill large enough for use. The vines should be lifted once a week. Every vine should be loose from hill to tip. This lifting may be done very rapidly with a pitchfork, but some care must be taken.—Kansas Industrialist.

FOLKS OUT, STOCK IN.

Here's a Simple Gate That Will Help to Solve the Problem.

It is often inconvenient to pause and unhook and then latch a gate between the barnyard or some other place where stock is kept and the garden or a field from which it is desired to keep and mals away.

To obviate such difficulties the plan illustrated will be found very convenient. As will be seen, the fence is made to end at two stout posts, be-twelve which is a rather larger opening than is usually allowed for a footpath gate.

From one of these posts the barbed wires of fence are built to posts so as to form a V-shaped opening, each ending at a post. On the other large the post is hung the gate, which swings each way and either comes against the V-shaped sides when pushed or may continue so as to strike the smaller posts. In either case animals cannot pass, and yet the gate is always open for human beings.—American Agriculturist.

OLD AND TRUE.

The old English farmers put their advice about keeping barnyard manure into two lines: Keep it moist and tread it tight. And it will tell your care quite.

That is pretty much the whole story.—Rural New Yorker.

The Kitchen Cupboard

USING LEFTOVER HAM.

WHEN there is cold ham, especially if more fragments have been left, it is sometimes difficult to know just how to use it.

The following suggestions along this line may be of use to the housewife: Baked Chopped Ham.—Grind the leftover ham or shoulder in a food chopper. Put in a dish a thin layer of bread crumbs, a layer of ham, then a layer of potatoes, and repeat until all is used up, the last layer to be bread crumbs, and bake in oven until brown on top.

In Individual Dishes. Ham and Eggs.—Take deep oatmeal dishes and put a little cold chopped ham in each, making a hollow in center. Drop an egg in each, season with salt and pepper and a small piece of butter on each. Bake in a moderate oven until whites are firm.

Ham in Cans.—Butter half dozen standard cups and fill with equal quantities of cold ham and cold potatoes. Boil in water for one hour.

Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

CHAPTER XIII. Capture and Trial.

FIVE miles back, on the road along which the fugitives had come, two men on horseback were galloping swiftly in pursuit. One was tall, with cool gray blue eyes under shaggy brows; gray hair, white mustache and an old-fashioned Imperial. His seat in the saddle was that of a seasoned cavalryman. The other was small, wiry, with a smooth shaven, hardset face, a mouth like a steel trap, cold hazel eyes that kept themselves fixed on the road ahead.

"We oughtn't to be very far behind 'em now, Jim," spoke the first man. "Th' ain't no way they could ha' dodged from the main road, is there?"

"No, colonel, they ain't," returned the other. "Not till they come to the old dirt road that leads to the caldids I told you about. That's where they're headin' for, Colonel Todhunter, and it's where we're goin' to rim upon 'em. We'll be there pretty soon too."

Colonel Todhunter's face was grim. "I hate to think of Lottie-May hogged!" he spoke. "It's mighty bad, mighty bad, suh. I feel that sorry for poor old Bate Doggett. Lord, Lord, the shame of it all is a-goin' to kill that good old man!"

The wiry little man to whom he spoke snipped his jaws together in angry scorn.

"That can't be helped now, colonel," he made answer. "I got to do my duty, woman or no woman!"

"I ain't askin' you to do anything less'n your duty, Jim," replied Colonel Todhunter. "And I'm just as responsible as you are. But I'm sorry, and I'm afraid too. If there's any serious trouble I hope there'll be some way of settin' that the girl don't get hurt."

"She won't if she behaves herself," said the other. "But she's got to do that, for there ain't goin' to be no time for foolishness. You've got to get the girl part of this business if you want to come out on top, Colonel Todhunter."

Colonel Todhunter sighed. "I reckon that's straight, Jim," he agreed. "The two rode on ahead without further words until they reached the crossroad."

"Here we are, colonel," spoke the little man, his voice low. "It's a safe bet they're layin' up till dark in that old shanty."

The two riders checked their horses to a walk.

Suddenly a woman's shriek broke the stillness. "For God's sake, Jesse!" the cry sounded. "You ain't a-goin' to kill me like a dog, are you?"

Instantly, hearing the cry, Colonel Todhunter pressed his horse to a full gallop. His companion did the same. They threw themselves from the saddle in front of the cabin. Colonel Todhunter hurled his weight against the door. It yielded, and he plunged inside.

A girl knelt in the center of the dark little hut. Her hands were uplifted in entreaty. Over her stood a man with a knife raised to strike. His face was black with rage.

Colonel Todhunter covered him with a swiftly drawn pistol. "Hands up, Chickasaw! We'll tend on Lottie-May ourselves—and to you. This is the sheriff o' Rais county I got with me."

The man turned. He looked into the muzzles of two revolvers, the sheriff heling well nigh as quick to draw as Colonel Todhunter. Their menace did not invite resistance. The man saw this truth instantly. Colonel Todhunter's steady eyes held his. The colonel spoke to the girl without looking at her. "Git off there to one side, Lottie-May," he said. "Quick!"

The girl sprang from under the knife. "Thank God, you come, Colonel Todhunter!" she cried. "Thank God—oh, thank God!"

And at the girl's cry the man laughed aloud. He threw his knife to the door. Then, empty handed, he stood confronting his captors.

The trial of Tom Strickland had been relentlessly hurried in the day of its closing by a political prosecution working through a complaisant judge servile to machine influence.

From that early moment of the selection of a jury the truth of a merciless haste was in evidence. It was explained by the court that there was imperative need for as little delay as might be possible, the docket being crowded and many cases remaining to be disposed of during the present term. The grim fact was that Colonel Strickland's enemies felt sure of a conviction and were determined that the verdict should be rendered in time to remove whatever peril of his nomination might still remain.

The evidence scored heavily against Tom from the start. There was plainly sounded a note of somewhat hesitating confidence, almost like jubilation in the swift announcement of the state's readiness for trial.

"Hands up, Chickasaw."

Colonel Bill Strickland, gray and pinched of face, recognized his instant menace. His closely shut lips broke their rigid lines pleasantly, precisely as they had done when Tom was brought into court and took his seat confronting the jury.

At the same moment a swift flash of anticipated triumph leaped into the eyes of old Ephraim Tucker, sitting with the state's counsel. Tom's father saw this, and his jaws set hard at the sight.

"They're feelin' pretty sure of a conviction," he whispered to Major Gentry Dryden. "Is it likely they've obtained evidence against Tom that we don't know anything about?"

The lawyer shook his head. "I hard to think so," he replied. "We've got a line on all their witnesses, I believe. I can't figure out how they'll be able to spring a surprise on us."

But one sinister sentence in the prosecuting attorney's opening statement to the jury undeceived him.

"We shall prove, gentlemen, beyond a reasonable doubt," the state's counsel said, "the motive which, we claim, led Thomas W. Strickland to slay Stamford Tucker, and then—moving a step nearer to the jury and lifting one hand impressively—"having proved this, we shall establish by the testimony of an eyewitness the fact of Thomas W. Strickland's presence at the scene of the murder at the time of its commission."

Major Gentry Dryden, in spite of himself, started at hearing this crushing announcement. Something of fierce resentment, pathetic in its impotence, showed in Colonel Strickland's grizzled countenance. Tom's face, a helpless perplexity in his eyes, went deadly white.

The atmosphere became tense with the sudden dramatic grip of the situation thus created.

And the hearing of testimony for the state began.

It went forward with merciless precision and dispatch, a certainty and rapidity so well ordered as to be overwhelming in moral effect.

The evidence was cruelly against Tom Strickland. Two witnesses, a farmer and his son, testified to finding the dead body of Stamford Tucker by the roadside, at a point midway between the Tucker home and the town of Nineveh, at daybreak on the morning of the 27th day of July just past. They were on their way into town to sell garden produce. The dead man lay on his back just at the edge of the road. There was a bullet hole in his forehead. A pistol, with one chamber empty lay an inch or two distant from his right hand. The witnesses had hurried into Nineveh and notified the authorities.

Simon Birdsong testified that had feeling had existed between Thomas W. Strickland and Stamford Tucker since the night of the clash between the Strickland and Yancey factions at the opening rally of the Strickland campaign. The witness stated that the accused at that time made threats to "get even" with Tucker for attempting to break up the Strickland meeting.

On the following day the accused had openly insulted Tucker in the bar room of the Nineveh hotel and had knocked him down a short time later when they again met in the same place. It was generally believed that there would be a bloody encounter between them before the campaign closed. Other associates of the dead man and the accused testified to the same facts.

Mrs. Todhunter, whose appearance as a witness for the state was a dramatic surprise and who was pitifully agitated, testified to the fact of the accusation made against Thomas W. Strickland by Lottie-May Doggett at the reception and hop given by the Nineveh Light Infantry, and her testimony was supported by that of several other ladies who heard the accusation.

Nicholas Bledsoe, the bartender in the saloon frequented by the Yancey-Tucker faction, testified to the facts of the two visits to his place made by the accused on the forenoon and evening of the 26th day of July just past. On the occasion of the latter visit the accused had told him that Stamford Tucker was the man whom Lottie-May Doggett should rightfully have charged with her ruin; that the girl had told him, the accused, of Tucker's meeting her secretly, and that he meant to make Tucker acknowledge the truth publicly or else kill him.

This witness' testimony established the hour of 8:30 on that night as the exact time at which Tom Strickland had left the barroom to go out to the

Tucker home for the purpose of compelling Stamford Tucker to agree to make such an acknowledgment or of forcing a hostile meeting in the event of his refusal.

White haired Mrs. Tucker, the dead man's mother; Katherine Tucker, his sister, and Ellen Barry, domestic in the Tucker home, testified that Stamford Tucker had left the house at or about 8:30 o'clock on the night of the 26th of July past, saying that he might be late in returning. He had not told them where he was going. They had believed he was going into the town of Nineveh.

Dr. Longford, the county coroner, testified to the established facts of the inquest that had resulted in a verdict holding Thomas W. Strickland for the killing of Stamford Tucker.

Luther Bradford, proprietor of a hardware store in Nineveh, testified that Thomas W. Strickland had purchased a revolver from him on the morning after the opening of the Strickland campaign in the Nineveh town hall. He identified the weapon taken from the accused at the time of his arrest as the one thus purchased and stated that the bullet found in Stamford Tucker's brain was fired from a pistol of the same caliber.

Colonel Thurston T. Todhunter and Miss Lottie-May Doggett had not answered to their names when called as witnesses for the prosecution. The deputy sheriff sent to bring them had returned later and unaccompanied that he had been unable to find them. This had occasioned much surprise, but, as both the state and the defense felt assured of their appearance at almost any moment, the examination of other witnesses proceeded.

The case against Tom Strickland began to assume its most ominous aspect immediately following the testimony of Bradford, the hardware dealer.

The prosecuting attorney turned smiling, from a whispered consultation with old Ephraim Tucker.

"Call Abraham L. Tolliver," he said. A negro man about forty years of age took the stand in answer to the sheriff's cry. He seemed frightened and reluctant to testify.

"What is your name?"

"My name is Abraham Lincoln Tolliver, suh—class my name."

"What is your occupation, Abraham—what do you do to make a living?"

"Mostly I ketches fish, suh. I hunts some, too, and I sets traps for coon and mink down yander in de Black Bottom swamps, suh."

"Where were you, Abe, on the night of July 26 just past?"

"Part de time I was right hyar in dis heah town o' Nineveh, and after dat I went on my way to whar I done got my camp in de bottom lands, suh."

"What time did you leave the town of Nineveh to go to your camp in the Black Bottoms?"

"I lef' duss a 111 while after half ter 8, suh."

"How do you know this?"

"Case I done ax Ben Dalton, de cut lud man whar I been visitin', what was de time duss as I was a-tellin' him goodby, suh."

"What road did you take to go to your camp in the Black Bottoms?"

"Why, suh, 'case I took'n de Black Bottoms road, suh—less'n ways 'twell I comes to a 111 hog path what leads down into de big swamps off'n dat ar road, suh."

"How far is it from town before you come to that hog path, Abe?"

"Dess 'bout'n a mile, suh, ter de best o' my knowledge and speakin' sorter offhand lak, suh."

"Do you know where the Tucker place is on the Black Bottoms road?"

"Yass, suh."

"Is that path of which you speak more or less than halfway to the Tucker place as you go out from town?"

"Hit duss a 111 mo'n halfways, suh."

"Now, Abraham," and the prosecuting attorney straightened to his full height and spoke with especial earnestness. "I want you to tell the jury exactly what happened to you on your way to your camp in the Black Bottoms, that night. Tell it in your own way just as it happened."

The witness looked at his questioner with apprehension in his childlike eyes.

"Mistah Cromwell, you—you done gimme y' word dey ain't no harm comin' to me if I tells dat?" he cried appealingly. "And you done tale me I haster tell it, whur I wants to ei no. Ain't dat so?"

"That is the truth, Abe. The law compels you to testify to the facts of your knowledge bearing upon this case. And it is the law's intent that no harm shall come to you for so doing."

The witness began in a low voice. "Dey wa'n't nothin' happened to me 'twell I come nigh to dat ar hog path what cuts off later de bottoms," he said. "Dess fo' I got dar, suh, I heern shootin'—one shot and den anunnr, hit seem lak ter me, suh. I was skeered when I hear dat ar shootin' and seem lak I better not go on ter whur I sho' ter run smack into it. Mistah Cromwell—yass, suh, I's a-tellin' it ter de jury, suh. So herecome I done hid in de brush side o' de road, suh, layin' flat on de groun'. And dar I stayed, suh."

The witness hesitated. "Go on," said the prosecuting attorney. "Tell the jury precisely what happened next."

"I lay dar, lak I say," resumed the witness, "when all of a sudden lak a man come down de road f'm whur I heern de shootin'. He juss straight by me on de road, and he seem to be staggerin' lak. He was talkin' to his self as he pass whar I was hid in de brush. He had his pistol awagin' in his hand, suh, lak a man what was too excited to put it back after he use it, suh."

The prosecuting attorney moved a step nearer the witness. "You saw that man plainly, Abe?" he asked. "You got a good look at his face?"

"Yass, suh. Hit was a bright moon

SUCCESS

— Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.

— In business most men fail even to get a start, because they lack money.

— The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.

light night. I seen dat ar man duss as plain as I done see you dis hyar mornin', suh."

"Did you recognize him?"

"Yass, suh. I knowed him soon's I set eyes on his face, suh."

"Do you see him in this courtroom now?"

"Yass, suh."

"Point him out to the jury, Abe."

The negro, now feeling reassured, leveled his black finger at Tom Strickland dramatically. The eyes of the two, the white man and the black, met, each holding the other's as if fascinated. In those of the witness there was a sort of histrionic relish of the value of the situation tempered by a latent apprehension. In those of the accused there was a strange and pitiful perplexity.

"Dess him, suh," spoke the witness. "Hit was Mistah Tom Strickland what I seen passin' me on dat ar road, suh. Lawdy massy! I done know him since he wa'n't mo'n knee high to a duck an'!"

There was a sudden stir throughout the courtroom, a movement of tense excitement, followed by a sinister hush. "After you saw and recognized this man," said the prosecuting attorney, "what happened then?"

"I told right dar 'twell he done gone out o' sight, suh. He was a-goin' in to 'ards town, and I done keep my eyes on him 'twell he turn a ben' in de road and I can't see him no mo'. Den I wait 'twell I sho' he ain't a-coulda' back. After dat, I got up and started on my way, keepin' in de shadow side o' de road."

Again the witness paused. "Well?" asked the prosecuting attorney.

Educated Sea Lions.

The Spark's world famous show, billed to exhibit here Thursday, July 31, will present this year for their patrons' appreciation, the largest and without doubt the most wonderful herd of performing seals and sea lions ever exhibited in America. These truly wonderful animals perform seemingly impossible feats, and do them with the ease and grace only assumed by human performers. They have been trained to walk a tight rope while skillfully balancing an open umbrella on the tips of their noses. They climb ladders while balancing large rubber balls, tossing them from one to the other with the greatest skill. They ride bareback on galloping horses while whirling brands of fire, juggling rubber balls and other articles. The performance of these remarkable sea animals is truly a sensation and the ease and quickness with which they obey every command of Captain Wesley, their trainer, leaves little doubt but what they enjoy giving the performance fully as much as the audience enjoy seeing it. Some idea of the expense incurred in presenting this act to the public can be obtained from the statement that these animals must be fed on live fish, which must necessarily be of the salt water variety, hence must come shipped alive from either the Atlantic or Pacific ocean. It costs from five to ten dollars per day to board these animals, varying according to the shows distance from either ocean.

CAMP FIRES WERE ATTRACTIVE

the highest pitch, Lee Young of Charlevoix was undoubted camp champion, and any quiet enthusiasts will do well to cross their fingers and consider before asking Lee to oppose them in this pastime.

Thomas Nowland (camp name King Strang) was the main spring in a baseball way. All night he would dream about it, play part of the day, wearing his startling red cap, and when it came his turn to peel potatoes, wish that the state government would make it unlawful for boys of baseball age to help with kitchen duties.

Jack Supernaw (camp name Pineapple), was the camper who extracted the largest amount of enjoyment from swimming. Jumping in on day with a little more vim than usual, he made such a splash that the light ship on Lansing Shoals parted from her moorings.

Every boy in camp was a gentleman—all conducted themselves in such a manner that the people of the island are anxious for them to return.

BIBLE CONFERENCE CLOSED

Largest in the History of the Bay View Assembly —Interesting Talks Given.

The bible conference of the Bay View Assembly closed last week with the largest attendance record in its history. Dr. John Batcom, Show of Chicago and Dr. Robert J. Patterson of Ireland were the two most popular speakers of the conference. Bishop J. F. Berry was kept by illness from being present during the closing days but Dr. Shaw took his place.

The date of the beginning of the big missionary conference was Sunday July 27th when Bishop Homer C. Stantz of South America delivered the morning sermon. The addresses of eminent mission leaders continue throughout the arrangements of this week. The afternoon of the coming week together with the evenings will be filled with popular lectures, convicts and entertainments with the Lyric Howe Moving Picture company at the end of the week.

The feature of next week's program will be the grand concert of the world's most popular singer, Miss Ernestine Schumann-Heink. Miss Schumann-Heink appeared at Bay View on two former occasions and the largest crowd of the season is expected to hear her this year.

On Sunday August 3rd the annual labor and social welfare conference will begin with an address by Charles Steig of New York. Mr. Steigle rose from a tenement house in east New York where he spent years as a tenement house cigar maker to be pastor of the great labor temple in his home city. This conference will consider such pressing problems as the social evil and the liquor traffic.

The Pere Marquette railroad has consented to hold the Charlevoix car running at Bay View next Monday night for the end of the Schumann-Heink concert. There will be no danger of spending the night away from home unwillingly. There are plenty of tickets yet unsold for the concert next Monday.

Wasted Medicine.
"There is one loss sustained by druggists that very few people know about," said the experienced clerk. "That is in the prescriptions that have to be made over, the same as clerks, stenographers, writers and artists, no matter how palatial, occasionally have to do their work over. The most careful drug clerk in existence is bound to make mistakes sometimes in measuring and mixing."

"He may pour in too much of some kind of liquid or sift in too much of certain powder. In most cases the overdose would not really affect the value of the medicine, but the conscientious clerk is not going to take chances on muddling anybody, so he throws away the whole mixture and makes up another prescription."—New York Times.

The Neighborhood Traveler.

It is written, and the world believes it, that travel is the infallible, exclusive cure for provincialism. Perhaps ultimately that depends on what the man takes with him in his wanderings. Merely to go accomplishes naught. In fine, one need not travel at all. If the man with the common eye will but use his eyes he may bring all the world to him. The Alps and the Rockies are worth seeing, indeed, but the man who is capable of really seeing them, if among them, is capable also of beholding landscape and glory in his own neighborhood. —Booklovers' Magazine.

Slightly Inconsistent.
"A patriot should not be concerned with matters of mere pecuniary compensation."

"And yet," replied Senator Sorghum, "when a man is rich enough to be independent of such considerations, they won't let him run for office."—Washington Star.

READING THE ENVELOPES.

They Tell More Than the Name and Address to the Postman.

Envelopes often tell me more about a man's financial standing than could the best "private inquiry agency." You can't "swank" a postman. And when I deliver on a certain day every month an official envelope with the letter stamp of a furniture firm on the back of it I know pretty well that the envelope contains the receipt for an installment on the furniture. When that envelope fails to turn up I keep an eye open for the other signs of impending bankruptcy.

An envelope with a crease down the middle has obviously been inclosed in another envelope. This tells me the handwriting of the householder and the kind of stationery he uses. When I deliver one of these day after day at the same house I know that the occupant is out of work and is answering my demands. But when the envelope stops coming I am left to wonder whether the applicant has been successful—or can afford no more stamps.

Sometimes there is tragedy in envelopes. There was a young fellow who used to stare down at me from behind the window curtain—so anxious to see what I'd got in my hand that he wouldn't wait till I'd pulled the bell. I soon tumbled to his job, for by nearly every post there would be a long envelope creased down the middle, showing it was a return. A writer he was.—Pearson's Weekly.

MAGNETIC CLEOPATRA.

Her Manner, Rather Than Her Beauty, Was Her Chief Charm.

The only authentic portrait of Cleopatra that is known to archaeologists is a bust which appears on a series of coins. It is on the reverse and bears the inscription in Greek, "Queen Cleopatra, the Divine, the Younger," while on the obverse is a portrait of "Antony, Dictator For the Third Time, Triumvir."

The workmanship of the coin is far from good, and this accounts in some measure for the undeniably plain appearance of the queen. Yet the likeness, as far as the features go, is a true one, for the other coins of the same series, though of a different type, give her the same features, an aquiline nose, a strong chin, a long neck and narrow shoulders.

The fact is that her beauty was not so remarkable as one would think from the spell she cast over Caesar and Antony. Plutarch, for instance, tells us "that her beauty in itself was by no means incomparable nor calculated to amaze those who saw her," but adds that the magnetic charm of her manner, the gracefulness of her movements, the persuasiveness of her conversation and her figure were most attractive.

Enjoyed What He Paid For.

It is interesting to note the effect that reputation has on those who are not good critics of the efforts of public performers, as a clerk in a downtown bank was telling.

"I happen to know a celebrated concert artist," he said. "One evening she was in the city and had nothing to do, so she came up to our very humble flat in Harlem to spend a quiet, homelike hour or two. The night was warm, and the windows were open. After dinner she sat down at the piano and sang several songs for us. The next day I heard that one of our neighbors complained loudly about the 'yelling' in our flat and said that such noises ought to be prohibited. Two nights later that same neighbor paid $2 a seat for himself, his wife and his daughter to hear our friend sing at a concert."—New York Sun.

Ptolemy's Big Boat.

Ptolemy Philopator was fond of building big boats. One of these is said to have been 420 feet long, 57 feet broad and 72 feet deep from the highest point of the stern. This vessel had four masts and what some would call steering oars, as they were not fastened, each forty-five feet long. She carried 4,000 rowers, besides 3,000 men, the large body of servants under her decks and stores and provisions. Her oars were fifty-seven feet long, and the handles were weighted with lead. There were 2,000 rowers on a side, and it is supposed that these were divided into five banks. That this extraordinary vessel ever put to sea is doubted, but that she was launched and used at times, if only for display, several historians are agreed.

AN ELUSIVE LAKE.

Queer Antics of an Erratic Body of Water in Switzerland.

In the canton of Valais, in Switzerland, at the foot of the great Aletsch glacier, lies a small body of water, Lake Marjelen, of which the Journal des Voyages reports a strange fact.

At irregular intervals every three or four years Lake Marjelen completely and suddenly disappears. The phenomenon always occurs during the last days of August. Without warning the lake empties itself, and the great quantity of water that it contained disappears through fissures in the rocks to swell the waters of the river Rhone. So rapidly does the lake empty itself that the water level of the Rhone rises several meters in a few hours, and the valley is flooded. An old custom grants a new pair of shoes to the first peasant who comes to announce the disappearance of the lake to the inhabitants of the valley.

All the autumn, after the disappearance of the waters, the basin of Lake Marjelen remains dry, but during the following winter and spring it gradually fills again.

Schubert once believed that the phenomenon is caused in some way by the neighboring glacier. Little by little the ice melts and the lake is refilled.

the lake until at the end of three or four years the accumulated water exerts such an enormous pressure upon the sides and bottom of the lake that the basin gradually becomes as porous as a sponge. At some point or other the water begins to escape. Then it flows more rapidly until at last it pours through the fissures on every side.

CONCENTRATION.

Do Only One Thing at a Time, but Do That One Thing Well.

The man who makes good is the man who can shut out of his mind all but one thing. An unsuccessful principal of a school once said that every teacher ought to be able to do three things at once. Of course he was wrong. The teacher who does one thing at a time and does it well is giving the pupil the best possible object lesson in concentration.

We have to learn to think clearly amid distracting noises, to go forward on a straight and narrow way with out diversions and excursions that waste our time and our substance and to keep at work regardless of the "tired" feeling, the "spring" feeling and whether the fishing is good or not. When the soft breeze comes in at the window, we must stifle the morbid flier against its allurements. We must pin our attention firmly to the turgid and dry geometry of a legal brief or the scribbled figures of the daybook or the busy system of a mercantile establishment and let every other thought await its turn at the end of other hours.

You may have heard a great lawyer in action in a crowded courtroom. What was the secret of his power? It was that he would not let the jury's attention or the witness' tongue wander from the relevant facts. He kept insistently to the straight line that is the shortest distance from point to point. He curbed, dismissed, all that was superfluous, immaterial and unrelated to the matter in controversy. —Philadelphia Ledger.

The big seed companies thought they had found the promised land for growing seed peas in the irrigated regions of Idaho, and the Everett B. Clark Seed company had acreage contracted there this year that should have yielded three hundred bushels. Mayor Cross is out there looking after the crop for them, and while everything was looking favorable, last week came a killing frost and two thirds of the crop is ruined.—Enterprise.

According to reports compiled by William K. Oates, state game warden, Michigan has 14,000 deer ranging wild within its boundaries. In 1912 there were 72,000, but hunters killed 12,000 last winter. Deer were found in 40 counties, but have disappeared completely in 20 counties. As a result of the report legislation may limit to one the number of deer that a hunter may kill.

A person who cannot swim, fearing the water, very naturally tenses his muscles as he struggles to keep his head above the water, until he is as hard as a rock, and like a rock he sinks. When as the swimmer, having no fear, relaxes his muscles, and hence becomes buoyant. The explanation is a simple physical one. Loose, but muscles increase the specific gravity of the body and makes it sink in water. Loose, relaxed muscles giving an ordinary supply of air in the lungs, will make the body float.

It has been frequently suggested and the suggestion is a good one, for every farmer to place his name and the name of his farm on his road-gate. Not only could persons driving to a place more easily find it, but it would add more pleasure and interest to people driving from place to place. This last result would have special effect with regard to well kept and pretty houses. An observing person will seldom pass a beautiful farm without desiring to know who is its enterprising owner.

Herbert Hart, grand chief, is in the city organizing the tribe of Ben Hur. Brother Hart has just closed a large class at East Jordan. He will be assisted by A. M. Phiney, deputy supreme chief of the state of Michigan. Preparations are being made to have Professor Steele, supreme instructor, on August 24 to be here with the paraphernalia and will give the full life of Ben Hur with stereopticon machine which will be interesting and members and friends will be welcome.

ney. "Tell the jury what happened then, Abe."

The witness shuffled uneasily in his chair, something of awe in his black face.

"I—I had come partly up to the door path when I was to strike off into the bottom lands," he resumed, "when I stumbled over something—a chair—on the ground, part in the road and part in the grass side of the road."

He wiped his face with his open palm. "It was a man," he said, and then, his color sobered, "and the man was dead. He been shot. I seen the place where he shot right in the back of his head, only a few feet from the door path. When I stumbled over him, I was full of blood. I stretched out my hand, down his back, and hit his head where he been shot and got all bloody."

The negro shuddered.

"Did you see the face of this man?" asked the prosecuting attorney.

"Yess, suh."

"Did you recognize it?"

"Yess, suh."

"Abe," said the prosecuting attorney, "tell the jury the dead man was whose body you then found and whose face you saw and recognized."

"It was young Mistab Stamford Tucker," the witness made answer.

"I knowed him, suh, duss as well as I know Mistab Tom Strickland settin' right hyar 'fo' my eyes, suh."

The prosecuting attorney waited a moment, his shrewd eyes studying the faces of the jurors.

"Abe," he asked, "why didn't you at once report the finding of Stamford Tucker's dead body and the seeing of Thomas W. Strickland, pistol in hand, as he came away from the spot where that body lay?"

The witness shook his head stubbornly.

"I want' none of my business, suh," he replied. "It's a mighty bad badder what goes axin' huss' up in a shoo'n' scrape 'twixt two white gent' men, suh. I was skeered ter do it, suh—class why—and I duss pick up my foot and make tracks fast as I could to whar my camp in de bottom lands was, suh. And you ain't heern no w'd 'boutn' what I seen, and you ain't had me fetched to yo' office, 'cept'n I was fool enuff ter tell dat ar ole Isral Fant what I run across down in de bottom lands, suh."

The state's attorney turned to the counsel for the defense. "You may take the witness," he said.

A searching cross examination failed to weaken in any respect the testimony just given. At its conclusion Major Gentry Dryden whispered earnestly with Colonel Bill Strickland.

It was plainly a spirited and hopeless conference. Colonel Strickland leaned back wearily at the end.

"It can't make any difference," he muttered sadly. "They've got the rope around Tom's neck now."

And, although the words were inaudible, this certainty of conviction seemed to be in the thought of all into the jurors' faces there came a look of pity as their eyes met those of the accused man, the latter perished bewildered, helpless.

CHAPTER XIV.

Acquitted.

THE state rests its case," announced the prosecuting attorney. A profound and ominous silence followed.

It was broken by the entrance of Colonel Todhunter into the courtroom. He came through a door opening from the sheriff's office in the rear. His clothing was covered with dust, as of hurried travel along sun scorched roads. He made his way direct to where Colonel Bill Strickland and Major Gentry Dryden were sitting. The latter rose a moment later.

"I beg the court's indulgence for a little time," he said hurriedly. "An adjournment is not asked—merely opportunity for a brief conference."

The request was granted.

Taking hasty notes meanwhile, Major Dryden was deep in consultation with Colonel Todhunter. Suddenly he stood erect and faced the trial judge, his eyes ablaze with excitement.

"May it please the court," he said, "new evidence of a most important character has just come into possession of counsel for the defense."

Then he turned to the Nineveh sheriff. "Call Lottie-May Doggett," he said. Lottie-May Doggett, emerging from the sheriff's own room, took the stand in answer to his call.

The murmur of excitement that had swept through the courtroom at hearing Major Gentry Dryden's announcement sank into absolute silence as the girl confronted the crowd. She herself was deadly pale.

"Where were you, Miss Doggett?" asked Major Dryden, following the necessary questions as to the witness's name, place of residence and the like, "on the morning of the 27th day of July just past?"

"I was at home that mornin', suh."

"Were you alone there?"

"Yes, suh, after grandfather left me, soon as he got his breakfast—until Colonel Todhunter come there, unybe some two hours later'n that, suh."

"What did Colonel Todhunter come to see you about?"

"He come to tell me that Stam Tucker had been shot and killed the night before," and that Tom Strickland had been arrested for killin' him."

"Was that the first you had heard of Stam Tucker's death?"

"Yes, suh."

"Did you know before then that a threat against Stamford Tucker's life had been made?"

"Yes, suh."

"Did you know by whom that threat had been made?"

"Yes, suh. I knowed the man who made it. He made it to me when him and me was alone together."

"Who was that man, Miss Doggett?"

"It was Jesse Bream, suh—'Chickasaw Jesse' folks here in Nineveh call."

"Who was that man, Miss Doggett?"

"He was a man, suh, who I had knowed for many years, and he was from Tennessee."

"When did Jesse Bream make this threat against Stamford Tucker's life in your presence?"

"On the mornin' after that party what the soldier company here in Nineveh gave at the hotel, suh."

"What led him to make the threat?"

"Something that I told him about Stam Tucker, suh, some time that had come up at the party I just spoke of."

"You must be more definite than this, if you please, Miss Doggett. What had you told Jesse Bream that caused him to make this threat?"

"He come to see me about something I had said to Mrs. Todhunter the night before at the party. They shamed me that night, and I told Mrs. Todhunter that Tom Strickland was the man who had brought that shame on me. And then Jesse Bream come to see me the next mornin'."

"He had been worryin' me to marry him, and he still wanted to marry me, but he said he was goin' to kill Tom Strickland for wrongin' me, and it was then I told him about Stam Tucker."

"What about Stam Tucker, Miss Doggett?"

"Why—I got skeered for Tom Strickland, suh—and—and—well, 'fo' I knowed what I was sayin' I told Jesse the truth—that it was Stam Tucker and not Tom Strickland who had brought my shame 'pon me. And it was then that Jesse said he meant to waylay and kill Stam Tucker the first chance."

"Why did you not tell Colonel Todhunter this?"

"'Cause I was afeared of, suh, Jesse had done told me that he was goin' to do it for my sake, and that if I ever so much as breathe a word of it he would kill me, too, but that he'd take me away and marry me if I didn't. He would ha' killed me too. I knowed that night well."

"Had you promised Jesse Bream to go away with him?"

"Yes, suh, I had. I wanted to get away from Nineveh, where I'd been shamed and disgraced, and he was the only man that would ha' married me after that. I might ha' told Colonel Todhunter the truth if I hadn't been afeared of Jesse and if I hadn't seen that it would be evenin' things up with Tom Strickland as well as Jesse had evened 'em up with Stam Tucker if I went away with him."

"What do you mean by evenin' up things with Tom Strickland? You have just testified under oath that Tom Strickland had done you no wrong."

The girl was silent for a moment. Her face flushed a dark red and then went white again.

"Tom Strickland made me eat my heart out for him," she cried suddenly, shame and a desperate defiance in the passionate eyes that confronted her audience. "He wouldn't see that I loved him better'n anything else in all this world and that I wanted him to love me the same way. And the reason he wouldn't see what I was at was a-bowin' him was that he was so dead in love with Miss Mary Todhunter. That's what made me tell that lie against him when I knowed that Mrs. Todhunter was a-goin' to ask me to leave the party."

There was a pitiful break in the girl's voice.

"I didn't care the tip of my finger for Jesse Bream," she cried, "I hated and despised him. But he was willin' to marry me and take me away from Nineveh, and so I kep' my mouth shut and waited for him to come and do it."

"I am going to ask you, Miss Doggett," said Major Gentry Dryden, "when was the first time you saw Jesse Bream after Colonel Todhunter's visit to you that day?"

"I didn't see him till the day before this here trial begun, suh. He had gone away to fix things up for marryin' me and takin' me down some where in Oklahoma, and he didn't come back till then."

"What time of the day did you see him?"

"I reckon 'twas 'bout three or four o'clock in the day, suh. He didn't come clear to the house 'cause he saw grandfather settin' on the front gallery. But he give a whistle I knew, and I went out and met him."

"Where did you meet him?"

"In a little clump of woods 'cross the road, not far from the old cabin where Aunt Miranda Binsom and old del Binsom, her husband, two colored people, are livin', suh."

"What had he come to see you about?"

"He come to tell me that everything was ready for us to run away that very night. He was plannin' to drive over into Halls county, and we'd get married there and then start for Oklahoma. And he'd been drinkin' and was lightheaded 'bout how he'd killed Stam Tucker. It was then I knowed for the first time, from his own lips, that it was him that killed Stam, but I'd been certain of it in my mind all the time."

"Did you consent to go away with him?"

"Yes, suh, and we went away together. The first day and night he got to drinkin' and when we stopped at the hotel in Nineveh he quarreled with me 'cause I said that I was in love with Tom Strickland and would ha' been with him if I had half a chance. And something I said then about my wish to be a soldier in the army, and he was ready to go straight to Oklahoma, he took me away from there the next day. We went far, too, and he was all ways a-wat'rin' me. At daybreak one mornin' we come to a timbered-down cabin deep in the woods, and he said that's where we'd stay till dark, and then I begin to be skeered myself."

"Of what were you afeared?"

"I begin to feel skeered that he was a-goin' to kill me. We had quarreled and quarreled, and whenever I lost my temper and he'd get me, I told him the truth—that I wanted to leave Tom Strickland to be him when I knowed Tom wasn't gity and knowed who was. Then, well, all of a sudden we had our biggest quarrel, and what I'd been skeered of come to pass."

"What do you mean by that, Miss Doggett?"

"I mean that Chickasaw Jesse tried to kill me, suh. He sorter went crazy and jumped for me with his bowie knife in his hand, and I'd ha' been dead the next minute if it hadn't been for Colonel Todhunter, suh."

"For Colonel Todhunter?"

"Yes, suh. Colonel Todhunter burst in the door of the cabin that very minute, brinchin' the sheriff of Halls county along with him. Him and the sheriff both had their pistols sighted on Jesse and made him throw his knife down. And then I done what I'd wanted to do all the time. I told them it was Chickasaw Jesse Bream who had killed Stam Tucker."

"And what happened when you did that?"

"The girl shivered. "I don't like to think about it. He made me feel like a cowardly bound dog," she said, a new shame in her reckless eyes. "Jesse Bream just laughed and foiled his arms and looked at me and then at Colonel Todhunter and the sheriff and said that I—told the truth—I killed Stam Tucker because he ruined Lottie-May," he said, smilin'. "And I run away with her to marry her. But she's tellin' the truth now to get shot of me, and I don't care what comes next. Take me and hang me. I'm done!"

[To be continued next week]

And something I said then about my wish to be a soldier in the army, and he was ready to go straight to Oklahoma, he took me away from there the next day. We went far, too, and he was all ways a-wat'rin' me. At daybreak one mornin' we come to a timbered-down cabin deep in the woods, and he said that's where we'd stay till dark, and then I begin to be skeered myself."

"Of what were you afeared?"

"I begin to feel skeered that he was a-goin' to kill me. We had quarreled and quarreled, and whenever I lost my temper and he'd get me, I told him the truth—that I wanted to leave Tom Strickland to be him when I knowed Tom wasn't gity and knowed who was. Then, well, all of a sudden we had our biggest quarrel, and what I'd been skeered of come to pass."

"What do you mean by that, Miss Doggett?"

"I mean that Chickasaw Jesse tried to kill me, suh. He sorter went crazy and jumped for me with his bowie knife in his hand, and I'd ha' been dead the next minute if it hadn't been for Colonel Todhunter, suh."

"For Colonel Todhunter?"

"Yes, suh. Colonel Todhunter burst in the door of the cabin that very minute, brinchin' the sheriff of Halls county along with him. Him and the sheriff both had their pistols sighted on Jesse and made him throw his knife down. And then I done what I'd wanted to do all the time. I told them it was Chickasaw Jesse Bream who had killed Stam Tucker."

"And what happened when you did that?"

"The girl shivered. "I don't like to think about it. He made me feel like a cowardly bound dog," she said, a new shame in her reckless eyes. "Jesse Bream just laughed and foiled his arms and looked at me and then at Colonel Todhunter and the sheriff and said that I—told the truth—I killed Stam Tucker because he ruined Lottie-May," he said, smilin'. "And I run away with her to marry her. But she's tellin' the truth now to get shot of me, and I don't care what comes next. Take me and hang me. I'm done!"

HER PROTESTS HAD A LIMIT.

Upon her hand, so small and white. He very gently laid his own. She looked up at him in fright. And whispered in a trembling tone, "You mustn't."

He sat a little nearer still. Whereat she moved her chair away. He gazed down in her eyes until He heard her rather feebly say, "You mustn't."

He bent above her where she sat And softly stroked her athen hair. She seemed so agitated that She could but faintly still declare, "You mustn't."

Around her waist he slipped an arm And drew her closely to his side. She seemed possessed of wild alarm And in imploring accents cried, "You mustn't!"

"Elizabeth," was the answer shouted back. "What's yours?"

"Lottie. The name of the people that lived in that house before you was 'Berry'."

"Our name is Parker."

"Ours is Taylor. You didn't know the Berries, did you?"

"No."

"They were something awful for borrowin'. They used to be sendin' over to our house all the time for everything you could imagine. Your folks didn't do that, do they?"

"No."

"Whereupon Lottie turned and should clasp to her mother at the second story window."

SPRAY FOR CODDLING MOTH

Orchard Experts Say Second Brood of Worms Are Hatching Now.
The third and last application of spray for the coddling moth on apples should be made during the coming week, beginning July 28 say orchard experts. This is for the second brood of worms which will be hatching in about a week or 10 days. A large number of the moths which produce this second brood of worms have emerged and are now laying eggs and it is important that the spray be applied just before these eggs begin to hatch. Do not spray the summer apples at this time. Only the fall and winter varieties require this application. Use lime-sulphur solution one and one-half gallons to 50 gallons of water plus two pounds of arsenate of lead paste or one pound of powdered arsenate of lead.

Teacher's Examinations.
The regular August examination will be held in the high school in the city of Charlevoix on Thursday and Friday, Aug. 14-15, 1913.
The questions in reading will be based on "The Merchant of Venice," Shakespeare.
Applicants will be required to take an examination in the subject of Agriculture.
Paper will be furnished to applicants. Those wishing their papers forwarded to other counties will be required to write with pen, others may use either pen or pencil.
This is a regular examination and certificates of all grades will be issued.
Respectfully Submitted,
J. H. Millard.

THEATRICAL

"The Sweetest Girl in Dixie" is one of the most vivid interests compelling, graceful, pathetic and altogether delightful Comedy-dramas seen on the American stage in many years. It is a finished piece of work. You can look on the wrong side and find no ragged edges. It is a fascinating play which reaches the thrill point in many places, and its presentation is as realistic as art and money can possibly make it. Every human feeling plays deeply through it, and in the conflict, and the outcome, there is much to stir regret, sympathy and admiration. At Charlevoix Theatre, Monday, August 1st.

At the Majestic Theatre, August 8-10, will be Cleopatra, the slender goddess of the Nile, in all her glory, fascinating beauty and charm of personality at the time when her power was greatest; when womanhood's morning just had reached the brilliancy of noon; when life and love meant all to her and just when death steps in and closes the historic, romantic tragedy with the sting of an asp.

Possibly no motion picture ever has been produced with such lavish costuming, gorgeous scenic effects and such perfect attention to detail. And it may be said that few, if any, ever have been posed at so great an expense as "Cleopatra" in which Miss Helen Gardner, the reincarnation of Egypt's beautiful queen, is appearing.

Miss Gardner's power of expression is as strong as though one were hearing her voice, witnessing her in the flesh instead of on a screen. People seem to lose sight of the fact that they are looking at a picture. The dramatic intensity is so great at times that some grip their seats and lean forward awaiting the next turn in the tragedy. Three miles of film was used in taking the picture and from this one mile, which now is being used, was selected for production. The production of the picture itself took three months of rehearsals and cost about $50,000. "Cleopatra" will be seen at the Majestic, August 8-10.

A moving heart stirring Comedy-drama as full of human nature as a nut is at present, elaborately staged. The camera could scarcely reflect with more fidelity, the pictures of love drawn from this romantic love story of the sunny south. During the play there are many tense moments but the play moves on steadily with definite purpose and is satisfying in every detail, in a fascinating delightful manner. At Charlevoix Theatre, Friday evening, August 1st.

Had Narrow Escape.

The life of Edwin Conant, 11 years old, was saved by a garden hose in the hands of his cousin, Clifford Gilman, 9 years old, at Petoskey.

Edwin was a mass of flames, the result of throwing kerosene on a bonfire, when Clifford heard his cries for help, and turned a stream of water on him. Edwin's entire body was badly burned.

Will Hold Picnic.

The Glensons will hold a picnic August 15 in the grove on Bert Ingalls' farm, south of Charlevoix. State Speaker Shison will be present and address the crowd that is sure to be present. Make preparations to take a day off and have a good time.

BANQUET A SUCCESS

Fourth Annual Event of the Charlevoix Republican Club Held at East Jordan.

The Str. Beaver took over a good sized crowd Tuesday evening to East Jordan, to attend the 4th annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club, held at the Russell House.

A majority of the speakers booked for the evening were present and discussed various topics. The banquet was fine and well served.

At the business meeting, routine matters were gone over and the following officers elected for the ensuing year:

President, J. E. Converse, Boyne City.

1st Vice President, Dr. Conkle, Boyne Falls.

2nd Vice President, E. N. Clink, East Jordan.

Secretary, G. E. Dutton, Charlevoix.

Treasurer, Lisle Shanahan, Charlevoix.

The next banquet will be held at Charlevoix in 1914.
